REPORT for the YEAR 1920.

Adopted at the Annual General Meeting.
March 8th, 1921.

With Bird Protection, as with almost every work of progress and reform, the year 1920 has been to a great extent one of hard-fought effort and of small advance. The volcanic fury of the Great War still chokes the world with lava-streams of unrest and waste, faction and folly; and it is hard to see as yet whether they will bury the good seed beneath cinders and ashes, or become the rich soil for fruitful harvests.

Two main questions were cited in last year's Report: (1) the amendment and consolidation of British laws for Bird Protection, and (2) the abolition of the trade in skins and plumage of wild birds. With regard to the former a first step has been taken by the appointment of an Advisory Committee, to which reference will presently be made. As to the latter all that can be said is that the national desire has been shown to be stronger than ever, but that the dealers have proved more potent to defeat it than the British Parliament to carry out the will of the British people.

THE PLUMAGE BILL.

In view of the fact that the Government showed no signs of promptly bringing in the Bill to Prohibit Importation of Plumage, promised by Sir Auckland Geddes (then President of the Board of Trade), a Bill was brought in by Colonel Yate, M.P., and read a first time on February 13th, 1920. It was backed by Mr. Acland, Viscountess Astor, Mr. Brace, Sir John Butcher, Brig.-General Page Croft (Member of Council, Royal Society for the Protection of Birds), Lieut.-Commander Dean, Mr. J. F. Green, Major Oscar Guest, Lieut.-Colonel Arthur Murray, Sir Beville Stanier, and Mr. Cathcart Wason, representing all parties in the House. On the motion for Second Reading, the Bill was talked out on April 30th, but was read a second time on May 15th, by 61 votes to 8. It was one of the first Bills of the session to be committed, being referred to Standing Committee C, a general Committee of the House to which some twenty Members were added, representing the promoters and opponents of the measure. Mr. E. R. Turton was chairman. On behalf of the Government Mr. Montagu said that Ministers desired to see it passed; as was indeed to be expected, seeing that it was but a continuation of work to which the Government itself put its hand in 1914. On every occasion when a division was taken (and the occasions were many) the majority in support of both principle and detail, and against every attempt to enfeeble its provisions, was such that no possible doubt could exist as to the Committee’s wish and intention.

Here, however, the “no-quorum” trouble speedily became menacing. The coincidence of other Committee meetings, the lure of Ascot, and other events told considerably; but unquestionably the real reasons for non-attendance were two: first, the enormous number of amendments, over 100, put down by three opponents of the measures, and talked round and about, with endless repetition and unquenchable verbosity, until it became evident that not a tithe of them could be got through in the session; secondly, the adoption by the opposition, after the first clause was passed, of further methods (as in 1914), by preventing the formation of a quorum whenever abstention would effect that object. Members not over-keen on spending their mornings in the House, probably felt still less inclined to do so merely to listen to the round of arguments gone through, after the manner of circus horses in the ring, by Mr. Bartley Denniss, Major Archer-Shee, and Lieut.-Commander E. Williams.

After many hours had been wasted throughout the summer, in waiting for quorums and dissipating them by talk without progress, it was announced that there was no time to take the remaining stages of the Bill during the autumn session, and it was abandoned.

It may be and has been urged that the Bill was brought in at an unwise time, when Government could not help it forward; but Bills far more contentious, far less unanimously called for, and also suffering from no-quorum committees, got home. Although not introduced at the instance of the R.S.P.B., it was actively supported by the Society in the Press, by public meetings, and by publications, and also by urgent communications to members of Committee C on the eve of every meeting. A reply to a circular issued by the Feather-trade section of the textile department of the London Chamber of Commerce, was prepared by Mr. Pycraft and circulated.

The Trustees of the British Museum passed a resolution in support of the Bill; and appreciative thanks are due to Mr. H. J. Massingham and his colleagues of the Plumage Bill Groups for their unceasing efforts to obtain legislation.
OPPOSITION ARGUMENTS.

The opposition to the Bill, in and out of Parliament, consisted of the old stock asseverations that the Bill would save no birds, because it would merely drive the trade elsewhere; that the birds need no saving because the trade protects and preserves them; that the Bill was sentimental and fanatical; that it would ruin the ostrich-feather trade; that it would throw thousands of British people out of work; that farms of all sorts and kinds, described in all manner of contradictory terms, exist for the supply of smuggled “osprey” feathers plucked from caged Egrets in Sind, or of moulting feathers picked up in Venezuela. The majority of these statements having been many times proved untrue, the farm theory has been the mainstay of trade argument, the possibility of thus breeding Egrets for their plumes being ingeniously kept to the fore in order to hide the piles of slaughtered birds whose skins in the sale-room render such apologetics impossible. The ostrich-feather business was also run hard, until the Ostrich-farmers of South Africa requested the Government to silence their undesired champion.

It may be added that the demonstration of workers, arranged by the trade, proved a fiasco, showing that the “thousands” of whom so much had been heard were but a few hundreds and consisted in the main of young girls, “some of them the veriest children, who,” commented The Draper, “it would be absurd to suggest could not find employment elsewhere.”

EGRET “FARMS.”

So far as the Bill is concerned the existence of alleged farms is of no importance, owing to the provisions made for adding birds to the schedule. That the trade has massacred millions of birds under the most repulsive and loathsome circumstances, is a fact, known to naturalists all over the world, that cannot be got away from. It is for this trade to prove—if it can—that such hideous slaughter of wild birds exists nowhere to-day; and that, not a fraction, but the whole, of the Egret plumage comes from “farms” near enough to civilisation to be thoroughly and frequently inspected for the prevention of fraud and cruelty. If and when they can prove this—not by mere statements, since trade statements have been found worthless lies too many times to make this possible—but by the evidence of competent and independent investigators, it will be time to place such plumage upon the schedule. Meantime the Bill is not a whit the less imperatively needed to stop the slaughter of Egrets, Herons, Birds of Paradise, Humming Birds, Trogons, Kingfishers, Goura Pigeons, Terns, Marabou Storks, Ibises, Albatrosses, and all other finely plumaged birds of the world, a slaughter which goes on while the trade talk and promise and talk and scheme as ever for delay, delay, delay. As Mr. Julian Huxley wrote in the Times (April 1st, 1920):

"First let us make sure that the abominable cruelties and the wanton disregard of the future which leads to extermination, either entire or over large territories, are put a stop to for good before we are willing to start on a new line. Let us make sure of protection before we start cultivation."

Birds of Paradise.

A new and ingenious story has been set afloat that Birds of Paradise—killed in devastating numbers by the trade hunters—attain their gorgeous plumes only when old and as a sign of senile decay. That such a tale, in defiance of the whole scheme and practice of Nature (which invariably decrees that fullest beauty betokens culmination of vigour and strength of animal life) and of the whole theory of Natural Selection, should have been seriously debated is odd, seeing that it was brought forward, not by a scientific naturalist, but by a professional collector; but it has clearly been found wanting, and dropped.

The Wild Birds' Protection Acts.

The Report of the Home Office Committee upon the existing Wild Birds' Protection Acts was, as noted in last year's Annual Report of this Society, issued in 1919, together with the Minutes of Evidence taken.

Considerable anxiety being expressed as to the use to be made of this Report, and the prospects of amended legislation, the Duke of Rutland, a Vice-President of the Society, asked a question on the subject in the House of Lords on April 28th. The Earl of Onslow, on behalf of the Government, replied that the Government accepted in general the proposals made by the Committee and, though unable to promise a Bill that session, hoped to set up a Central Ornithological Advisory Committee as recommended by the Report, for the purpose of advising the authorities with regard to the framing and administration of Orders made under the Acts. The work of the Committee was to be somewhat extensive under the recommendations, including collecting and classifying information, investigation of the food of birds, and the extension and encouraging of educational and propagandist work, promotion of "Bird Day," etc.; but for the present its powers are of a purely advisory character, not involving expenditure of funds. It was further recommended that the members should be nominated by the Home Office, the Scottish and Irish Offices, the Departments of Agriculture, and the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds.

Advisory Committees for England and Scotland were duly appointed in July last. The English Committee consists of the Duke of Rutland (Chairman) and representatives of the R.S.P.B.
(Mr. Montagu Sharpe, K.C., Chairman of Council), the Natural History Museum (Dr. Percy Lowe, Keeper of Ornithology), the Ministry of Agriculture (Mr. H. G. Maurice, C.B.), and the British Ornithologists' Union (Mr. E. C. Stuart Baker, Secretary). Possibly the Home Office may think well to strengthen the body by the addition of a further member or two with direct knowledge of the working of the law and of the economic value of birds.

In order to secure some measure of uniformity in the Orders of Counties, and of groups of counties, the R.S.P.B. Council would be prepared to render every assistance to the Home Office if such should be acceptable.

The Scottish Committee consists of Mr. Hugh S. Gladstone (Chairman), Dr. Eagle Clarke (Royal Scottish Museum)—who has for many years acted as adviser to the Scottish Office on the subject, Mr. H. M. Conacher (Board of Agriculture for Scotland), Mr. H. J. Crowe (Fishery Board for Scotland), Professor J. Arthur Thomson, and Dr. W. E. Collinge.

BIRD PROTECTION ORDERS.

The Bird Protection Orders issued during the year have dealt in the main with the better protection of the Lapwing and its eggs. In May, 1919, the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds sent a circular letter to all County Councils in England and Wales asking for such protection on account of the great value of the bird in preserving food-crops from insect-pests. Since then Orders have been obtained for 25 Counties and 22 County Boroughs, making a total of 42 Counties and 33 Boroughs where the Lapwing is protected during the whole year, or where its eggs are protected, partially or entirely, or where both these methods are adopted for its preservation.

In July, 1920, the Ministry of Agriculture took up the question, expressing in its Journal desire that increased protection should be afforded the species, and pointing out that the Home Office Committee recommended complete protection for nests and eggs, except—before April 15th—from owners of land, and suggesting this as the minimum protection which should be given the eggs. The recommendation is repeated in a revised edition of the Department's leaflet on the Lapwing. The Norfolk County Council have since passed a resolution adding this form of protection to their Order. As the Act of 1894 gives no power to reserve rights to owners in respect of eggs, but only the power to prohibit the taking of certain eggs, or eggs in certain areas, it will be interesting to see how the Council's application to the Home Office fares. If the present law can be read so as to permit the protection of nests and eggs from all persons except landlords and tenants of the land, many farmers and landowners will rejoice.
ENFORCEMENT OF THE LAW.

What is, however, more needed even than amended legislation is, that existing laws should be known and enforced. Constant references in the Press, and letters received every day by the Society, show that even those who write articles on the subject, and those who are earnestly concerned in the protection of birds, have not taken the trouble to inquire what the law actually is and what can be done locally under Bird Protection Orders. Thus an immense amount of misunderstanding is abroad, and constant opportunity for protecting and preserving birds is lost for want of a little knowledge. The Society is always ready to supply at a small charge chart-lists of Birds, showing the effect of the Acts and Order in any County or County Borough; and copies of the local Order may be had from the Clerk of the County or Borough Council. The help of the local police should be sought wherever it appears that the law is infringed.

All bird-lovers should also see that local Bird Protection Orders, in not a few instances neglected, ignored, or even completely shelved during the years of war, are resuscitated, advertised, posted, and acted upon in 1921.

RARE BIRDS AND PROTECTED AREAS.

The year 1920 has been marked, not only by active continuance of the customary work of the Watchers Committee in the areas where watchers had been employed in previous years, but by new efforts in the Llandudno district and on the Lancashire coast. Special inquiries were prosecuted at both places, on behalf of the Society, by Mr. H. W. Robinson, M.B.O.U. There is a most interesting colony of birds on Great Orme’s Head, where the danger is, as usual, from professional egg-collectors and their allies. Neither this place nor the Little Orme could be made a sanctuary in the strict sense of the word, as they are open to the public; but with the co-operation of Lord Mostyn and his Agent, the Town Clerk of Llandudno, and the lighthouse-keepers, both Heads will be well “Watched” in future; and the Society’s notice-boards will be set up in the Happy Valley and at the entrance to the Marine Drive round the Great Orme. Considerable difficulty was experienced at Ainsdale owing to the absence of a Bird Protection Order for the Southport area, but this will be at once remedied; with the help of the shooting-tenant and his keeper, hundreds of would-be egg-thieves were kept off the place, and several successful prosecutions had an excellent effect. By making this area a sanctuary the chief Lancashire nesting-place of the Lapwing is protected, and but for such action hordes of men from the towns would clear off the eggs. Certain rare species also nest there, and their eggs have been taken in quantities in other years.
Interesting reports from the areas in England, Wales, Scotland, and the Shetlands and Orkneys, where the Society’s Watchers are stationed, have been received, both from the men themselves and from members of the Watchers’ Committee who, at their own expense, have visited the areas and investigated results.

Illustrated articles, treating of the rarer British birds in their native haunts, often appear in magazines and newspapers; those who write and those who read these might well consider that were it not for the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds and its Watchers, there would be far fewer of such interesting species to write about, while some would undoubtedly have been wiped out altogether as British breeding species. Subscriptions to the fund are at present wholly inadequate to meet the expenses, great as is the amount of voluntary help; and it is felt that many nature-lovers outside the Society’s members and the few other generous supporters, whose financial assistance enables the work to be carried on, may well be asked to give it that help and consideration which its object, and the faithful services of the Watchers, so richly deserve.

A special report has been issued to subscribers, so that it is needless to furnish here any lengthy account.

Lighthouses.

With the return of normal conditions, the bird-rests at the four equipped Lighthouses are now in regular use; and at Spurn Point, in particular, they are more needed than ever, because stronger lights have been installed and the danger to migrating birds thus increased. Satisfactory reports continue to be received of the use made of the perches. Twice a year they have to be dismantled and re-erected, at the Society’s expense, and if funds allowed the co-operation of the lighthouse-keepers might be fitly recognised and encouraged by individual gifts of books, which would increase their knowledge of bird-life and wile away some monotonous and trying hours for these valuable servants of the State.

The Collector Again.

A new menace to the survival of rare forms of bird life is the formation of a so-called “Museum of Comparative Oology” or “World Museum of Birds’ Eggs,” in California. Its declared purpose, under a cloak of science, is to link together egg-collectors in all parts of the world and to stimulate the collecting, buying, and exchanging of eggs, with the object of getting together an enormous collection of “variety” clutches, and the prospect of so infecting private collectors all the world over that this foolish craze “whether followed as a fad, a pursuit, or a passion,” may “become at last a major avocation.” In this country the collecting mania is an ever-present danger to the existence of every rare bird. The Society has to spend large sums annually to circumvent the raids of the private hoarder and his trading brother; and its efforts are hampered in every direction by a network of chicanery which the law and the officers of the law are rarely strong enough to break. The illegally killed bird and the illegally taken egg are greedily added to their cabinets by men whose professions might make them pause before the commission of offences far less contemptible in method of operation and far less heinous as sins against the community. It may be hoped that members of British Natural History and Ornithological Societies will answer in plain language—as several leading societies have already done—the bland invitation sent them to back up Santa Barbara oologists.

SONG-BIRDS AS FOOD.

The supply of small singing-birds as gastronomic tit-bits in poulterers' shops and the provision departments of large Stores, has again come into prominence through the increased exhibition of Skylarks and continued attempts to introduce Thrushes and other species. The custom of serving up Larks at City dinners and smart functions has long deprived England of her justification for protest against the eating of Robins and Warblers by French and Italians, and undoubtedly, unless a strong effort is made to suppress the whole thing, it will not be long before Robins and Warblers grace the tables of British Caligulas. On the other hand practical effort would speedily have its effect. If every Fellow, Member and Associate of the Society will refuse to deal with any poulterer, or with the provision department of any Store, offering Larks for sale, those Stores and those poulterers will find that it is not a paying business to provide them.

Perhaps associated with the Lark-catching business is an attempt to label the bird destructive to the farmer, led by members of one County Council who moved to have it taken off the schedule of protected species to which it was specially added by the Act of 1881. The conclusions arrived at by careful and scientific observers and investigators have, however, settled the matter of the Lark's utility as one of the guardians of the crops, “with the balance of utility largely in its favour.”

BIRD-AND-TREE CHALLENGE SHIELD COMPETITIONS.

The Society's work in the Elementary Shield Competitions is not only for the benefit of the children of to-day but for that of the men and women of to-morrow. While efforts are being made on every hand to tempt workers to the land and to make the countryside a more attractive place for intelligent dwellers, few things can be more helpful than giving rural residents a genuine interest in the country itself. Study of the economic relation of birds to agriculture and horticulture was so hopelessly neglected in the past that little but a mass of prejudice, based on superficial observation and venerable fables, remained in much of the countryside not so many years ago. Even to-day, when investigators have discovered that all our common birds (with the possible exception of three or four super-abundant species) are valuable allies of man, the village child seldom advances further on the faith of the village grandfathers than to admit that some one species “does less harm than other birds.” To further practical knowledge of wild life, interwoven with delight in Nature itself, must be regarded as among the most important developments of modern education.

The Society have to thank directors of education and numerous teachers for most sympathetic co-operation, and only regret that, for lack of funds and staff, it is not possible to extend the Competition to every county in the kingdom.

Appended is a list of the chief awards. Some of the papers showed remarkable powers of observation and expression, with infinite patience and care in outdoor watching and note-taking. More than one school has formed a bird club for natural history study and active protection of birds and nests; feeling against bird-catching, wanton destruction, and cruelty grows apace wherever genuine interest is thus inculcated; and no one knowing the country can say that such a movement is not called for. Interest in the character and growth of Trees, and the national importance of Tree-planting, is also more than ever a national need.

The Boy Scouts.

Cordial relations exist between the Society and the Chief Scout and Lady Baden Powell, as regards the training of Scouts and Guides in observation and protection of wild life. It is hoped to organise a Competition for a Scouts' Challenge Shield; and the details of the "Bird Wardens" badge have had the careful consideration of specially qualified authorities connected with the Society, by request of the Boy Scouts' Association.

Publications and Lectures.

A considerably increased number of lectures has been given during the year, illustrated by the Society's lantern slides in the majority of cases; and new slides have been added. Lectures to Boy Scouts, Girl Guides, and Women's Institutes have been a special feature, the last-named dealing mainly with the Plumage question but also with the economic value of birds on the land. In cordially thanking the voluntary lecturers who give valuable aid in this way, the Society would be glad to welcome the names of others who would lecture in their own neighbourhoods on any branch of Bird Protection work; and would also mention that monetary help in this campaign is needed for general expenses, fares, and slides.

Bird Notes and News has entered on its ninth volume and completed its seventeenth year of publication. Its value as a record of the movement and of progress is appreciated in an encouraging manner not only in this country but by societies and workers on the Continent and Overseas. Other publications have included fresh issues of "The Plumage Trade in a Nutshell," "Milestones," "Dress in Relation to Animal Life," "A B C of Common Birds," and "Bird-Ally" post cards. The subject of the Society's Christmas Card was that much-persecuted bird, the Kingfisher—killed in England by anglers and for its beauty placed in a glass hearse, and in enormous numbers in tropical countries for plume-trade profits. The painting was by Mr. Roland Green, of the Ruskin Studio, and, judging by the sale, met with the admiration it deserved. Through the kindness of the Ulster S.P.C.A., the Society was enabled to exhibit at the Royal Ulster Agricultural Show.

Nesting-Boxes.

The supply of nesting-boxes and of food-stands, boxes and trays has been continued, the former including both the "Tree-hole"
(or Berlepsch) pattern, and the almost equally popular “Walden,” all being made in England.

Council and Membership.

The Society’s Vice-Presidents have received two additions during the year, namely, the Countess of Shaftesbury and Sir William Portal, Bart., F.S.A.; but it has lost two powerful friends in Viscountess Galway, Vice-President since 1912, and Canon Rawnley, who was one of the oldest champions of the movement, joining the Society in 1893, and becoming a member of the first Council in 1904, and a Vice-President in 1912. Canon Rawnley’s vigorous speech on the Plume question at the Annual Meeting last March will be fresh in the memory of those who heard it. He was keenly interested in the Bird and Tree scheme, and gave the beautiful Cumberland Challenge Shield, which was designed by the late Mrs. Rawnley.

To the Council have been added Mr. W. P. Pyrcraft, Mr. Maurice Portal, and Dr. Philip Gosse; and Mr. J. L. Bonhote has been re-elected to it on his return from Egypt. The new Fellows elected number 63, including one Life Fellow; and the new Members 184, including three Life Members. New Hon. Secretaries appointed are: Farnham, Mr. R. S. Moreau, and, on his unavoidable resignation through leaving England for Egypt, Miss Esme Tinne (Mr. Moreau, however, continues to represent the Society); Wellingborough, Miss Kathleen Jacques; Oxford, Mrs. Gifford-Amblar; Carlisle, Miss Coulson; Southampton, Miss Lettice Macnaghten; N. Oxfordshire, Mrs. Barne; Birmingham, Mr. W. B. Urwin. The Society has again to acknowledge its indebtedness for the invaluable assistance of its active Hon. Secretaries; the largest number of new Members has to be placed this year to the credit of Miss E. Tinne.

In Greater Britain.

In Canada the premature and sudden death of Dr. Gordon Hewitt, Entomologist and Consulting Zoologist to the Dominion Government, is a grievous loss to the cause of Bird Protection, and to the study of economic ornithology throughout the Empire. Since going out from Manchester to Ottawa in 1909 he had inaugurated important national schemes in nature-reserves, and the historic International Treaty with the U.S.A. for protecting migratory birds owed much to the ability and energy with which he promoted it on the Canadian side. Although only 35 years of age he had done unforgettable service to the cause on both sides of the Atlantic, and shortly before his death had finished a work on “The Conservation of Wild Life in Canada.”

The movement continues to be ably pressed forward by the Ministry of the Interior; and the leaflets in English and French issued by the Dominion Parks Branch may well arouse the wonder of English people that nothing of this sort can be done by our own well-staffed Departments.

In Australia the various Societies continue their efforts. In South Africa Bird-Protection has, among other influential friends, Professor Ernest Warren and Mr. R. Godfrey, whose articles on "South African Birds of Economic Value" have been for some time a feature of the attractive monthly South African Gardening and Country Life; and Mr. F. W. FitzSimons, of the Port Elizabeth Museum, who on his visit to Europe this year was able to make known the real attitude of South African ostrich-farmers towards the Plumage Bill.

Other Countries.

The great Audubon Association of the United States has this year lost its founder and father, Mr. William Duttcher, whose name will ever be deeply honoured by Bird-Protectors. He was the first President of the Association, and it is sufficient tribute to his fine personality to say that no one proposed or would have tolerated a change in that office, although for ten years paralysis had deprived him of power to speak or write. His successor is Mr. T. Gilbert Pearson, who for many years has been the vigorous and active Secretary of the Association. Mr. Pearson was one of the early writers to make known the facts as to the horrible slaughter of nesting Egrets in Florida for the plume trade; and it is worth noting that so lately as the spring of 1920 the United States Biological Survey had to commission special wardens to break up the illegal traffic in "ospreys" from that State and to get the trade agents apprehended, although the surviving Egret colonies are constantly guarded and watched. Bird-Lore, edited by Dr. Frank M. Chapman, and Natural History, the Journal of the American Museum of Natural History, afford abundant information and stimulus to lovers and protectors of Nature in the States; and to these publications was added, in 1920, Vol. 3 of the periodical Statement issued by the Permanent Wild Life Protection Fund, whose inception and far-reaching activities are due to the untiring vigilance of Dr. W. T. Hornaday. The volume includes not only campaign reports from the States, but accounts of Bird-Protection in Egypt and France, with particulars of the financial help afforded to French workers. A facsimile is given also of the diploma presented to Dr. Hornaday by the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds.

In France, Denmark, Holland, Belgium, Spain, Italy, Argentina and Brazil, bird-lovers continue in sympathetic communication with the Society; and it is peculiarly interesting to receive letters on the subject from Lithuania and from Russia. M. Louis Ternier, an old friend of the R.S.P.B., has succeeded the late M. Magaud d’Aubusson as President of the Ligue Française pour la Protection des Oiseaux.

FINANCES.

As in several past years, the Society succeeds in keeping a small balance on the right side in its general accounts by dint of rigid economy and by most regrettfully refraining from much needed work it would otherwise gladly undertake. The Watchers’ Fund ends the year heavily in debt; yearly expenditure at the Lighthouses has to be defrayed from capital; and no new School competitions have been arranged. Although the Society has to thank many constant and generous supporters, and has enrolled a large accession of Fellows and Members, increased rates for postage, printing, etc., are a heavy burden. Two small legacies have been received, but a regrettably small amount accrues to the funds from this source; while the Associates’ minimum subscription, though a welcome sign of co-operation and sympathy, adds little or nothing to its resources.

OBITUARY.

The death of two Hon. Fellows of the Society—Dr. Gordon Hewitt in February and Mr. William Dutcher in July—has been referred to. The Society has also to deplore the loss of Canon Rawnsley, one of its oldest supporters, Mr. Briton Riviere, R.A., Lady Wantage, Lady Acland, Sir Alexander Baird, Sir J. A. Brooke, Lord Justice Cozens-Hardy, Colonel Alfred Bibby, Miss Rhoda Broughton, Mr. H. M. Gray, Miss Blanche Hartley, Mrs. Johnston, Mr. Harold Messel, Mrs. Peirse-Duncombe, Mrs. Stuart, Miss Underwood, Rev. C. Warren, Mrs. Waterhouse, Miss Laura Evans, Mrs. Lawley Parker, Hon. Mrs. Sydney Meade, Miss Shadwell, Mr. C. A. Keith-Falconer, and many other members and sympathisers in Great Britain, and, in Spain, Señor Emili Tarré, of Barcelona.

Proceedings at the Annual Meeting of the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds.

The Thirtieth Annual Meeting of the Society was held on March 8th, 1921, at the Middlesex Guildhall, Westminster, by kind permission of the County Council. The Chair was taken by the Right Hon. Earl Buxton, G.C.M.G., Hon. Treasurer, in the absence, through illness, of Field-Marshal Lord Methuen, G.C.B., G.C.V.O., C.M.G. (Vice-President). E. Lemon (Hon. Secretary); and among those also present were: Sir William Portal, Bart., F.S.A., Hon. Mrs. Drewitt, Mrs. Grove Grady, Miss Hall (Vice-Presidents); Mr. J. L. Bonhote, Miss Clifton, Dr. Philip Gosse, Hon. Mrs. Henniker, Mrs. F. E. Lemon, Mr. W. P. Pycraft and Miss E. L. Turner (Members of the Council); Hon. H. M. Allanson-Winn, Mrs. F. E. Rudge Harding, Mr. T. Edwin Harvey, Mr. G. W. Hayes, Miss E. L. Haywood, Mr. R. E. Heath, Miss Herchmer, Mrs. E. C. P. Hull, Mrs. Hutton, Mr. Holbrook Jackson, Mr. Raymond de Jersey, Hon. Mrs. C. Kennard, Miss Kennard, Mrs. Hamilton Leigh, Miss A. S. Lemon, Dr. Percy Lowe, Misses Lush, Mr. A. Holte Macpherson, Mrs. H. J. Massingham, Mr. T. G. Matthews, Mr. Allan H. P. Noble, Miss Esmé Pigott, Mrs. Godfrey Power, Miss L. Relfe, Mr. F. Redmond, Miss S. L. Richards, Miss E. Rolleston, Mrs. Sainthill, Mrs. T. Schneider, Miss G. Stevenson, Mrs. G. Skilton,
Mr. E. F. Turner, Mr. and Mrs. Desborough Walford, Mrs. Walking-ton, Mr. H. H. Wardle, Mrs. H. Boyd Watt, Miss S. Wilberforce, Mr. F. Wood, and many others, the room being full. Mr. Bartley Denniss, M.P., representing the Feather-trade, asked, and was granted, admission.

The President of the Society, the Duchess of Portland, wrote:—

"I am very sorry indeed that I shall be in Scotland on the day appointed for the Annual Meeting of the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds, and I consequently trouble you with this letter in order to ask you to be so good as to present to the meeting my apologies for non-attendance. At the same time I would take the opportunity of assuring the members of my continued sympathy with the Society's work and my constantly deepening conviction of the importance of its propagandas.

"I have recently been shown a letter (written by the one and only Inspector whom funds at present allow the Society to employ) in which a very dismal account is given of the bird-dealers' market in Bethnal Green. The writer states that vast numbers of chaffinches and other small birds are there confined in covered cages not much larger than a mouse-trap. It distressed me very much to read this letter, and I hope the Society may be able to take some action which may result in the introduction of legislation for the purpose of making it compulsory that if birds are kept in cages, those cages must be provided with adequate space, air, and light.

"I hope that the meeting may be a very successful one and that one of its results may be the accession of a large number of subscribing members so that funds for extended propagandas and preventive work may be available."

Field-Marshal Lord Methuen wrote:—

"I cannot tell you how vexed I am to fail you. I am seldom ill, and can never remember failing a public engagement, but I have had to throw over the Levee and two other engagements. I had longed to say how much Malta owes to the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds for what it has done for the birds there. The manner in which they suffered from wanton shooting, and from confinement in small cages exhibited for sale, was apparent to all strangers. There was much opposition to the Bill introduced by the Government, but it was passed, and the result reached my best expectations.
As I said in a speech, in words to the following effect: 'God has given Malta two of the greatest blessings, namely, beautiful flowers and lovely birds; let us appreciate them both.'"

The Chairman of the Council, Mr. Montagu Sharpe, K.C., was likewise, unfortunately, unable to be present owing to an attack of influenza, this being the first time he has been absent from an Annual Meeting of the Society for years.

Letters of regret at inability to attend were also received from Viscount Grey of Falloiden, K.G. (Vice-President), who sent the following letter:—

"I am very sorry that absence from London prevents me from being present at the meeting of the Society for the Protection of Birds. I am in full sympathy with its object and work. An interest in the life of wild birds and the observation of them is one of the most wholesome and satisfying of human pleasures to those who are fortunate enough to have an inclination for it, And the preservation of all but the very few species that are really injurious and sufficiently numerous to do mischief is a most desirable object. I wish the Society all success in its efforts to preserve birds generally and rare species in particular in our own country, and to promote legislation such as the Plumage Bill in order to protect beautiful species abroad from becoming rare and finally extinct.

"The more civilisation and trade advance and spread, the more need is there for care and effort to prevent the natural beauty and amenity of the world being impoverished by the destruction of harmless and attractive bird life,"

From the Countess of Shaftesbury (Vice-President), the Countess of Mayo, the Earl of Cassillis, Viscount Guillamore, the Speaker of the House of Commons (Right Hon. J. Lowther), Hon. Edward Lyttelton, D.D. (Vice-President), Brig.-General Page Croft, M.P. (Member of the Council), the Hon. Gladys Graham-Murray, Miss Maude Royden (who wrote, "there is no cause in the world I would more willingly serve"), Sir Harry Johnston, Mr. F. C. H. Borrett (who enclosed £2 2s. as the amount of his railway fare had he come), Mr. T. A. Coward, Rev. F. L. Blathwayt, Mr. A. Mayall, Mr. J. Monteath, Mr. Frank E. Marshall, Rev. A. Scott, Colonel Sir Edward Brotherton, Rev. A. Linzee-Giles, Mrs. I. Lemel, and many others.

Mr. LEMON presented the Annual Report, and dealt briefly with the main features of the Society's work as therein summarised.

The CHAIRMAN, in moving the adoption of the Report and Statement of Accounts, expressed the deep regret they all felt in the absence of Lord Methuen, who had looked forward to being present and who would have been very pleased to see the splendid attendance they had. This was the first time for seven years that he himself had had the opportunity of attending a meeting, and he was very glad that his first appearance on a public platform since his return from South Africa should be as Chairman speaking on behalf of the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds. During those seven years he had retained his Honorary Treasurership; and it was satisfactory to know that in spite of the difficulties which the war brought to all such Societies as theirs, they had made such really considerable progress. Although, however, the finances were in a sound condition he, as Treasurer, wished to appeal for still greater support. They were told that the love of money was the root of all evil, but with such a Society as theirs it was the want of money which prevented good from being done, and he was sure that if the public realised the work accomplished by the Society they would provide it with more ample funds.

THE ADVISORY COMMITTEE.

There were one or two points in the Report to which he would like to refer. One was with regard to the formation of a Central Advisory Committee to assist in the administration and co-ordination of the Wild Birds Protection Acts and Orders. Some regret was expressed that this Committee was not at present entrusted with all the powers they had hoped to see given to it. But the institution of such a body was a great step; and no doubt in the future, when it had proved its value, it would be called upon to assist in the obtaining of information, for instance, as to birds which were destructive, and still more as to birds which were useful from the point of view of the food supply of this country, and would act as a sort of propagandist committee to circulate information generally in regard to the protection of birds. He, therefore, congratulated them upon the appointment of the Committee, even though it did not go so far as might be desired.

The Plumage Question.

With reference to the Plumage Bill of 1920, when he heard in South Africa that this Bill had passed its Second Reading with a minority of only eight against it, he did hope that at last, after all these years, practical action would be taken. He had had, however, some experience of House of Commons Grand Committees, and knew that if it was not a Government measure, it was easy enough for a small number of members, who were determined that it should not pass, to prevent it from passing. With all other members of that Society he very greatly regretted that a Bill, the chances of which seemed so favourable at the beginning of the Session, should be among the massacred innocents at the end. He noticed that a good deal of play was made with the argument that if the importation of plumage in general was prohibited, the ostrich feather trade would be injured. He did not believe for a moment that the prohibition of plumage which was obtained by the destruction of birds, often involving a great deal of cruelty, would in the least affect the business of the ostrich-farm, which was on a totally different basis. As far as that argument was concerned he was confident there was nothing in it upon which opposition to the Plumage Bill could be founded.

The Watchers’ Committee.

Turning next to the Society’s Watchers, he wished to say a word or two about the work of these men, appointed by the Society in various parts of the country to protect the rarer birds and their nests during the breeding season and thus to carry out the law. The Watchers’ Committee was instituted in 1905, and he was glad to find that the number of Watchers and the number of places protected had both increased. In 1919 there were fourteen places with twenty Watchers; in 1920 seventeen places with twenty-three Watchers. As members of the Society they owed a great debt of gratitude to this Committee and its Chairman for the active part they had taken in the work; and special thanks were due to one gentleman, Mr. H. W. Robinson, who last year spent his holiday camping out in one of these nesting areas in order to act as watchdog on behalf of the birds. He commended this example to the ladies and gentlemen present. He was sorry to have to add that the revenue of the Committee was a blot on their finances, and he specially appealed to the public at large to give contributions towards this particular branch of the work. The Watchers could be paid only a comparatively small wage, but they did not work for money only. They took a real interest in it and loved and knew their birds as a shepherd his sheep. In connection with that effort for the preservation of our rare birds he welcomed the presentation to Mr. Peat that afternoon in recognition of his efforts to protect a White-tailed Eagle. He had been much interested to note the various species of birds specially guarded by the Watchers. One fact which assisted them on some parts of the coast was that men were now less eager to make perilous descents of the cliffs in order to take birds and eggs. He remembered that many years ago, his father, being greatly interested in birds, tried to acclimatise various species in new districts. Among these was a pair of Choughs, and when one of these died and he sent to a dealer to try to get another as mate for the survivor, he was told that it was too expensive to obtain Choughs, as the dealer had had to pay for the funeral of the man who got him the last one.

He had much pleasure in moving the resolution.

BIRDS AND INSECTS.

Sir Henry MacMahon, in seconding the motion, expressed the great satisfaction it gave him to attend this meeting and to say a word on behalf of our feathered friends, especially the small birds. The very important part played by the small birds in the balance of Nature was not commonly realised, and in order to emphasise his remarks in this connection he would contrast what was going on inside and outside this country. In England they were well placed in many ways, and especially in the absence, or comparative absence, of insect pests. There were very few insect pests in this country to complain of; they had on the other hand a great wealth of small birds. He was not sure that people recognised cause and effect in this. A large portion of his life had, however, been spent in Eastern countries where insect pests were very prevalent and formed a serious menace to agriculture and also contributed to the spread of disease. It was a curious fact that in those countries there was by no means a wealth of small birds, especially at the important time of the year when small birds were most needed. He knew countries where there were a great number of winter bird visitors, but these visitors went away at the breeding-time, just when they were most needed for the destruction of insect life. He might take one country, Egypt, to illustrate his text. It had always been a land of plagues, and it still remained a land of plagues, especially insect plagues. Now, Egypt suffered greatly from a lack of birds, particularly small birds. There used to be a greater number, but as the foreign population from southern European countries increased, the birds had diminished, as these foreigners had a liking for small birds to eat. Again, in Egypt there was little shelter or accommodation for nesting birds. The trees had been cut down, and there were no hedgerows. He endeavoured while he was there to encourage the planting of copses and undergrowth wherever possible, but every inch of land was grubbed, and every small bush was cut down. Those who visited Egypt 35 years ago, the time he first went there, must have been struck, as he was, by the great abundance of the White Egret. You saw immense flocks of them everywhere. But it was discovered that their plumes had a great value in the millinery trade, and the birds were destroyed. Egypt had quite forgotten those ancient days when the Ibis was a sacred bird, and watched the destruction with callous indifference. One morning Egypt woke up to find that the Egret had disappeared, and then, too late, it was discovered that the cotton crop was being ravaged in the most disastrous way by the cotton-worm, the damage done amounting to several million pounds a year. The question then arose how to get the Egret back again. Lord Kitchener took up the matter energetically, and thanks to him the birds were imported and efforts made to encourage their breeding in the land once more. The experiment had been going on now for some years, and they hoped, by the expenditure of time and money, ultimately to repair to some extent the disaster incurred by the killing of the birds. This was merely one illustration of the evil that could result from the extermination of birds.

The resolution having been carried unanimously, the CHAIRMAN moved the re-election of Her Grace the Duchess of Portland as President, which was seconded by Mr. Meade-Waldo and agreed to amid applause.

Education and Public Museums.

Sir Sidney Harmer, in moving the election of the Council and Officers for the year, said that he had been asked to say a few words regarding general knowledge of bird life, particularly among children and young people, with special reference to the utility of public museums. It was a subject on which he was extremely glad to offer one or two remarks, and he could express most cordial agreement with the Society's efforts in the direction of education. From his own experience in the Natural History Museum, from conversations overheard in the galleries, and from correspondence he received, he had ample evidence of the amount of ignorance existing. He had heard apparently well-instructed visitors identifying the giraffe as an Ostrich. The question of museums in regard to bird life was a little complicated. Those who worked in museums, and best knew what a museum had to show, were not always in the best position to study bird life in the open; while those who lived in the country were not always in touch with the scientific worker at the museum. Two different classes of children had to be considered. As far as town children were concerned, he thought with pleasure of the increasing use made of the museums by Elementary School children. At the Natural History Museum they had, particularly on holidays, large and apparently enthusiastic parties of children who crowded the galleries. Many of them took a great interest in the objects displayed; and he did thoroughly believe that the instruction children got in that way was very much to their advantage, as it gave them an interest in life and helped them to know a few facts connected with the protection of birds, which was a matter of such vital importance in this country, and in other parts of the world. In a museum they were able to illustrate one or two sides of the subject.

In the Museum Galleries.

In the first place, they showed the actual specimens, serving to illustrate the differences between one kind of bird and another. They also showed exhibits illustrating the life history of the bird, which was a subject of absorbing interest. There was in the Bird Gallery a beautiful series of cases containing birds with their nests and eggs in their natural surroundings, and if any child, or other person, liked to study these exhibits, particularly with the aid of the guide-book, it would be possible to learn a great deal in regard to the habits and life of those birds represented. Then there were cases which showed a certain number of birds—not all by any means, but some conspicuous examples—beneficial to agriculture, indicating what birds did for the farmer. Then again they were able to illustrate the connection between insects and disease, a subject of far greater importance in warmer climes than our own. One might perhaps say that just as the birds are man’s friends, so the insects, or many of them, are man’s natural enemies, and if not checked in any way would very soon make the world uninhabitable for human beings. Their numbers, to begin with, were perfectly prodigious. A friend of his, a distinguished entomologist, reminded him that our Natural History Museum was not large enough to contain even a moderate selection of the insects of the world. Inhabitants of the country had far better opportunities for the study of Nature than had people who lived in the towns, and if it was possible to get hold of the children in the most impressionable time of their lives, and lead them to learn something of the interest and beauty of the study of Nature, they would be doing a great thing. There was no doubt that children were ready enough to take an interest in living things if they were encouraged to do so by means of wise direction on the part of their teachers. The Society had taken a leading part in educating the children, and he felt certain that, in doing this, they were acting entirely on the right lines, and he wished them every success in their endeavours. In order to get perfectly successful instruction in natural history, the teachers should have complete knowledge of the facts. That, of course, was an ideal which could not be attained, but it was greatly to be desired that those who had to teach children about birds, should be themselves sufficiently instructed to perform this duty satisfactorily, and also it seemed to him extremely important that they should use a considerable amount of judgment in what they said on this subject. It was no use appealing too much to mere sentiment, and thus raising very difficult and troublesome questions.

Value of Nature Study.

A great deal might be made of the question of utility, but what he thought was perhaps the strongest point that could be emphasised in the instruction of children was the real necessity and value of the study itself. If only children were taught to believe that it was better to learn the habits of the living birds than to possess a few eggs stowed away in a drawer; if they could be got to study how birds feed, and how they rear their young; if they gained some idea of the wonders of migration, and so on, they would lay up for themselves a real interest in Nature which might be of service, not only to themselves but also to the country at large.

Birds in the Country.

In seconding the resolution Sir William Portal added his tribute of welcome to Lord Buxton on his return to them after so long an absence. In connection with South Africa there was a story which had interested him concerning President Kruger.
Kruger was one of the few men to whom a statue was erected during his lifetime, and at the instigation of his wife, a lover of birds, the hat on this statue was provided with a hollow at the top in order that the small birds might quench their thirst with the water that collected in this space. Reference had been made to the English hedgerows. He hoped that all who lived in the country would remember that it was our hedgerows that provided homes for the little birds and made for their preservation and their happiness.
No other country in Europe, or in the world, possessed such hedges as we had in England, and it was these which made England a paradise of birds. Land was rapidly changing hands; he thought they might well ask the new owners to spare the hedges instead of grubbing them up, because of the charm and usefulness of the birds. There was one bird, and he thought only one, for which he had a personal dislike, and that was the Little Owl, which he was afraid bid fair to become a pest. In regard to the education of children he might make further reference to the Bird and Tree Essay Competitions organised by the Society. Two years ago he was present at the Festival in the village of Barton Stacey in Hampshire, when that little school had won not only the Hampshire Shield, but the Shield open to the competition of all schools in the country; and next month he hoped to attend a similar festival at Ridge, which had won the Hampshire Shield for 1920-21. It was particularly interesting to know that this festival was to be held at Broadlands, where the first Anti-Plumage League, from which the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds was descended, was formed by Lady Mount-Temple.

The resolution was agreed to.

The Importation of Plumage.

Dr. Archibald Fleming moved the following resolution:

"That legislation is necessary in the interests of bird preservation throughout the world, and that in the opinion of this meeting the importation into England of the plumage of wild birds should be prohibited."

It had been said, commented the speaker, that women should realise their individual duty in the matter of bird-destruction by refraining from the use of plumage in their millinery. He had long urged this upon women, as many others had done; and had he and they been successful there would be no need for his speech that day, or for the resolution regarding legislation on the importation of such plumage, or for the legislation itself. To his mind the wearing of these feathers was a barbarous fashion. There were certain things he looked upon as exerting a barbarous and brutalising influence on modern life. Hunting tame stags was one of these things; shooting pigeons or other birds from traps was another; the eating of larks and small birds in general was a third. It might seem a plausible excuse to say that one life was as precious to its possessor as another, and that it was as wrong and as barbarous to take the life of a turkey for food as that of a skylark or a quail. He did not think so. There was something distinctly brutal in taking a little bird's life in order that some self-indulgent man or woman might obtain a succulent morsel from its tender breast. The matter of wearing wild birds' plumage was also distinctly brutalising, though not so much so as if women were always conscious of the cruelty inflicted. Women had, as a rule, much imagination, but they found it convenient to drown their imagination when desirous of securing a personal adornment; and, therefore, he considered it a duty to awaken and stimulate that imagination by telling them exactly what happened before the feathers reached them. It was not always pleasant to offer this testimony, but he had striven to do so, in private conversation, in the pulpit, and elsewhere, saying plainly that it was a fashion he detested. It was sometimes urged in extenuation that some of these "ospreys" were imitation. He did not see much force in that excuse. The suggestion that a woman wore imitations for the purpose of making her friends believe that she had paid a high price for the real thing did not seem to him to make her conduct much better. Something had also been said about being careful not to use extreme language and remembering that a certain trade was a little sensitive on the matter. This argument, too, left him cold. In every reform there was some vested interest up against them, and it was necessary to speak clearly and fearlessly, without being too much afraid of hurting the feelings of interested parties. It was the same in the case of the Slave Trade, and in that of other reforms. Let them remember that the Father in Heaven was the Father of bird and beast as well as of the souls and bodies of men; that He who marked the sparrow's fall marked also that of the murdered Egret, and that "He prayeth best who loveth best all things both great and small."

Mr. Holbrook Jackson seconded. He was a keen and strong supporter of the Plumage Bill, and his support was based on humane feeling. The enemies of the movement called humanity sentimentalism, but they did not greatly mind about that, since every honest effort and action to better the world was promoted by humane feeling. They could, however, substantiate their arguments by answering the various objections raised against legislation. For instance, it was said that such legislation would destroy an important industry. It would destroy an industry, but not, he thought, an important industry. It was said that it would occasion a great amount of unemployment. It would occasion a certain amount of unemployment, which could be readily absorbed into other trades. If it destroyed one industry it would open the way for the development of much greater ones, because if they abolished the use of the plumage of wild birds in millinery they would encourage the manufacture of legitimate goods for decorative purposes and the employment of a much greater number of people. There were two main lines of action in all propaganda work. One was by direct action, and they must not allow that useful phrase to be monopolised by industrial revolutionists. They wanted to induce the leaders of fashion in this country to refuse to wear the plumage of wild birds. If they could do that half their victory would be won; and for this they needed the use of personal influence. But that was not sufficient; for fashion was capricious, and they never knew what interests were at work behind fashion, promoting the sale of a particular line of goods on purely mercenary grounds. Therefore, they had to fall back on legislation, and he hoped they would be untiring in their efforts to secure that the Plumage Bill became law at the earliest possible moment.

The resolution was carried nem. con.

The Caging of Birds.

Mr. Frederick Spriggs moved:—

“That this meeting records its detestation of the taking and caging of wild song-birds during the winter months and urges the Home Secretary to promote legislation which will put a stop to these practices.”

He hoped there would be a unanimous vote for this resolution also, for such legislation would mean putting a stop to the abominable practice of imprisoning birds in small cages. Last week he had been in East Street, Walworth, and there saw birds confined in cages six inches by six inches by four. Among them were no fewer than thirty cages of larks. He trusted that strong representations would be made to the Home Secretary on this matter. It might interest Londoners to know that 42 species of birds were by law protected all the year in the County of London, and these birds should be similarly protected all over the country.

Miss Clifton said she had the greatest possible pleasure in seconding the resolution. People did not realise what it meant to a winged creature, like a bird, to be shut up in a narrow cage, where it sang its heart out in suffering. She could not imagine any one deriving satisfaction from a pleasure purchased at such a price.

The motion was carried unanimously.

The Man with a Gun.

Mr. Aubyn Trevor-Battye, proposing a vote of thanks to the Chairman, added a few remarks upon the danger to birds due to the increase in small holdings and the changing ownership of land. In his experience the sons of farmers who now were owners where before they were tenants, commonly took out gun licences, using their guns (always of course “for rabbits”) early in the morning and at dusk, when it was too dark to see a rabbit. The list of gun-licence holders on the church doors grew longer each year. What did these men shoot at? The British farmer had, alas, not even yet learnt to know that the Owl was his best friend. Mr.
Trevor-Battye made an earnest appeal to all who live in the country to use their utmost possible endeavours to discourage this disastrous practice.

Sir George Greenwood, in seconding, referred especially to the failure of successive Plumage Bills to pass into law in spite of the telling majorities recorded in the House of Commons. How was this to be accounted for? It would really seem as though some sinister influence were at work unseen in order to stifle this long-desired, long called-for, legislation.

Lord Buxton having briefly acknowledged the resolution, with which he associated the speakers and the Middlesex County Council, the proceedings terminated.
