Hangin' with Dr. Cooper • The new provost has plans to improve academics, focusing on students themselves.

Spaine Stephens

N.C. State's new provost, Stuart Cooper, doesn't take stu-dents' needs lightly. After all, he carried some of heir heaviest belongings into the dorms during himself visible on that day, he plans to make himself even more accessible to students in the future. Cooper took over as provost on Aug. 1, following the search for a new provost after Kermit Hall departed for Utah State University at the end of the fall 2000 semester.

a hew proves after technic har-departed for Utah State University at the end of the fall 2000 senseter. "I will make myself available not only to students," he said. "I'd be happy to meet with any student." He is conscious of students' needs to be heard, especially at a university as large as NCSU. Coming from the position of vice president and chief academi-ic officer at the Illinois Institute of technology, a smaller cam-dinet attention and a focus on unity. To achieve this, Cooper plans to "develop more of a sense of unity from ten strong colleges," and enhance diversity to "enhance student academic experience." He believes the top significant goal is bolstering the academic reputation of the uni-versity and knows that the NCSU community must commit to that task. "How to move to a higher place depends on faculty, staff and stu-dents," he said. "N.C. State is coming to be one of the top schools in the nation. That's not to say that we don't want to move higher, but it's a very good school."

school." Though new to the university community, Cooper has assessed the existing level of excellence of NCSU and wants to use it to push further ahead with faculty, staff and students. He said hiring quality people would be key, as well as working across bound-aries to bring national promi-nence to the university. He plans to study how the departments and colleges are perceived and then work with the Provosi's staff to see "how we can make things work better," and observe the success of First Year College, the Honors Program and First Year Inquiry. To focus on students, Cooper wants to visit with Greek soci-eties and other student groups and possibly continue the popu-lar Provosi-for-a-Day program that Hall implemented to famil-arize students with the workings of the university on a daily basis. Already, he has made efforts to get to know members of the community by playing basket-ball in Carmichael Gym with staff and students.

staff and students. Cooper is also excited about the future of NCSU because of additional assets like Centennial Campus, which initially attract-ed him to the university. "One of the key factors in mak-ing the position attractive to me is Centennial Campus," he said. "It suggests that the university is on the move." He said the faculty works with so many different companies and agencies, and that it is "a way for students to get a bridge between undergraduate and research. A very attractive fea-ture of N.C. State is the avail-ability of laboratory and research participation." With Centennial Campus sup-porting other research and aca-demic efforts on campus, Cooper relies on the philosophy of the Provost's Office to serve stu-dents not only in the academic sense but also to give them a taste of other features of the uni-versity. He said the ultimate goal is to "graduate well-rounded stu-dents who are knowledgeable in their areas of study but also exposed to the arts and humani-ties."

He said that with his staff, this should not be a problem.

snoutd not be a problem. "There is a good quality staff in the Provost's Office," he said, stressing the service-oriented motivation within the office. "There are very good people on staff."

There are very good people on staff." Cooper has been pleased with the general motivation within the university as well. "I" mimpressed with the people rve met," he said, "the great people on the staff, and the stu-dents I met during the summer." As for limiting factors for the university's progress, Cooper called the state budget situation, which could burden the universi-ty with serious cust. a "bump in the road."

the road." "The people in North Carolina and the legislature support pub-lic education," he said. "I think this will be a one-, possibly a two-year problem, but the state will continue to move forward. The future looks bright for North Carolina, and the university as well."

well." He said that depending on the final budget there may be delays in some programs, but the uni-versity intends to implement activities and plans to the best of in a deline. its ability

"We want the outside world to hear [about NCSU]," he said. "I'm excited about the long-term prospects."

Among the senate's responsi-bilities are regulating the stu-dent body budget and initia-ing projects like Nightwalk, a project to keep the campus safe to ensure the welfare of students. ents

'We are looking for students

"We are looking for students who are motivated and want to become a part of what goes on at N.C. State," said Jessie Elting, FAC chair. "The Student Senate is the voice of the student body, so we need all kinds of people to apply." Applications are due on Friday, Aug. 31 by 5 p.m. and are available in the Student Government office in 307 Witherspoon or online at http://students.nesu.edu. No experience is necessary, and all applicants are interviewed by the FAC for additional background information.

packground information. Appointees who are selected will be notified Monday, Sept. 10, and in addition to being approved by the senate two days later, they must also attend the Student Government retreat the fol-lowing weekend.
