Senators doubt students' preparation

After an address by Chancellor Marye Anne Fox, senators raise concerns for handicapped accessibility and freshman preparation.

Charles Duncan
Senior Staff Reporter

Addressing the Faculty Senate Tuesday, Chancellor Marye Anne Fox discussed the recent UNC Board of Governors meeting and answered senators' questions.

Faculty senators also raised two issues of concern to the senate. One issue dealt with handicapped accessibility on campus and the other, brought up by Robert Bruck of the plan pathology department, on the preparation of incoming freshmen.

"I have students, and I'm not talking about a handful...that are functionally illiterate," Bruck said. "This is not a majority, but it's a significant minority."

Bruck said his concerns were with the admissions procedures, specifically not requiring applicants to go through interviews or submit essays.

He suggested that faculty could help with interviews for applicants. "Perhaps the university's faculty needs to step up," Bruck said.

Dennis Daley, chair of the Faculty Senate, said the issue will go to the director of undergraduate admissions and the senate should hear a presentation from the director on this topic.

The second issue of concern, raised by Stephen Middleton, faculty senator from the history department, was on accessibility for handicapped students.

Middleton said he had a specific student who had troubles in Harrelson Hall and with parking on campus.

"The university is legally compliant, which is not the same as adequate," Daley said.

After discussing the issues of concern, the senate heard brief comments from Fox.

The chancellor discussed the outcome of the last BOG meeting, giving an overview of the campus initiated tuition increases and talking about the other various changes that came out of the meeting. One of the changes mentioned by Fox included the new engineering program proposed for East Carolina University. Fox said the ECU board argued that they could start the new program without additional faculty resources, which brought laughter from the senate.

David Beasley, of the biological and agricultural engineering department, raised concern over ECU's ability to start an engineering program without additional resources.

"There ain't no way to do that," Beasley said. "You have to have identifiable credentials."

Fox replied, "You can be sure I made those arguments." The chancellor also said she had accepted the senate's proposal to form a budget advisory committee from faculty members to report directly to the chancellor.

Educators remember decision

Five lecturers discuss the impact of the Brown v. Board of Education on high schools and communities in the South.

The African American Cultural Center hosted an event discussing the importance of remembering Brown vs. Board of Education Monday evening. This event was part of the AACC program "Brown vs. Board of Education: A Catalyst for Change."

Students gathered in Witherspoon Student Center to listen to a panel of experts discuss the effects of the monumental decision in favor of desegregation levied by the Supreme Court in 1957. Specifically, the discussion focused on how Brown vs. Board of Education affected high schools and communities in the South.

The panel included a trio of N.C. State educators from the College of Education.

PETE ELLIS/TECHNICIAN
Looking for dangerous areas on campus, students Jonathan Short, Leslay Peebles and Heather Payne follow Greg Cox of Facilities Operations on Nightwalk Tuesday night. "Everything [students list] will be addressed in some manner or fashion, so it's worth it to point these things out," Cox said. Administered by the Nightwalk division of the Student Body Department of Community Service, Nightwalk pairs students and faculty with officials from Facilities Operations to pinpoint dangerous areas around campus. To cover more ground, participants were divided into 11 groups. One group found burnt-out lights on blue-light phones, trip hazards and insufficient lighting in their area. Gay Perez, assistant director for University Housing on West Campus, said that this is a good event and that he wanted to "make sure my campus is safe for the students who live there."

Scholar debates foreign policy

The lecture was the first for this week's Human Rights Week.

Julia Dice
Staff Reporter

Bruce Jentleson of Duke University kicked off Human Rights Week by addressing the United States' role in the world at Talley Student Center Monday night. The event was sponsored by the International Studies Committee of the College of Humanities and Social Sciences.

Jentleson discussed four main topics throughout the lecture: an overview of foreign policy agenda; the role the United States should play in the world key policies in the United States and how foreign policy affects everyone. He then discussed the amount of change that has occurred since the events of Sept. 11, 2001.

"The U.S. found out that foreign policy was no longer out there but it was in here," Jentleson said. He referred to this as the end of isolationism and discussed how world affairs were not outside the United States anymore.

While speaking about Sept. 11, Jentleson spoke of something

Major(s): Political Science (Public Policy)
Activities: Senator, First Year; Liaison between Inter-Fraternity Council; Senate Vice-Chair of Campus Community Committee

Will Langley likes to smile. In fact, he wears a grin on his face all the time. "I've always smiled at people, and they've always smiled back."

Langley is a long-time N.C. State fan. He grew up in Raleigh, and he and his dad were regulars at the basketball games in Reynolds Coliseum. When it came time to go to college, there was only one choice for Langley.

"I didn't even apply anywhere else, this is where I knew I wanted to come," Langley said. "My mom always encouraged me to go and visit Duke or Yale, but I said, 'No Mom, I want to stay here.'" Langley has been spreading the "Will Plan" around campus via his larger than life sandwich boards for the past few weeks, and he was thrilled when the supporters at his campaign kick-off started chanting, "We want Will."

Langley has spent his time here supporting the athletic teams, getting involved with the Student Senate and spreading his "Big Willy Style." One of his favorite activities has been sponsoring student groups in the senate to get them started.

Mital M. Patel doesn't just have a head for business, he lived in one for the first 16 years of his life. His family owns a 20-

"Growing up in a motel, I worked in the motel, and I did my homework in the back," Patel said. "I miss the experience of running it with the family and the random stories you get from guests."

Patel has an entrepreneurial background since many of his extended family members and ancestors had their own businesses in India. In fact, for generations his extended family has passed down a farm that still runs in India.

Patel had previously planned to go to business school, but he's now thinking that he might go to law school after he graduates because he's interested in combining his future computer science degree with computer networking security law and other areas that combine the two fields.

For now Patel hopes to rework the appropriations process for student or-

U.S. FREES 272 DETAINEES

The U.S. military released 272 security detainees Tuesday from Abu Ghraib prison, once Saddam Hussein's most notorious lockup. Many smiled or flashed V-for-victory signs, while others shouted angry complaints.

In a carefully choreographed event, the prisoners were brought out in groups from inside the prison. Given $10 each toward the cost of their journey home, they left in buses chartered by the U.S. military for Baghdad or the center of Abu Ghraib.

Reporters taken by the military to witness the event were not allowed to interview the men being released.

AL-QAIDA CLAIMS IT HAS NUCLEAR WEAPONS

Osama bin Laden's terror network claims to have bought ready-made nuclear weapons on the black market in central Asia, the biographer of al-Qaida's No. 2 leader was quoted as telling an Australian television station.

In an interview scheduled to be televised on Monday, Pakistani journalist Hamid Mir said Ayman al-Zawahiri claimed that "smart briefcase bombs" were available on the black market. It was not clear when the interview between Mir and al-Zawahiri took place.

U.S. intelligence agencies have long believed that al-Qaida attempted to acquire a nuclear device on the black market, but say there is no evidence it was successful.

SUSPECT PLEADS GUILTY IN KY. RAPE-MURDER

One of two men charged in a fatal dorm room attack on a Western Kentucky University freshman pleaded guilty Tuesday to murder and rape and will testify against his co-defendant.

In exchange for Stephen Soules' guilty plea, he is to be sentenced to life in prison without possibility of parole, said Warren County Assistant Commonwealth's Attorney Chris Cochran.

Soules agreed to testify against Lucas Goodrum, Cochran said. Goodrum has pleaded not guilty and is being held without bail on charges of murder, rape, sodomy and arson. He could face the death penalty if convicted.

Soules and Goodrum, both of Scottsville, were charged with killing and raping Katie Autry, a Western Kentucky University freshman from Pellville.

Autry, 18, was found in her smoldering dormitory room early in the morning of May 4. She had been beaten, stabbed and burned, and died three days later at a hospital.

PENNSYLVANIA SCHOOL DISTRICT CLOSES AS STUDENTS FALL ILL

Classes were canceled Friday at the Cornell School District in suburban Pittsburgh when 134 high school and elementary students grew ill with flu-like symptoms. Many remained home Monday.

When reports of students vomiting in class reached Superintendent D.J. Johnson on Tuesday morning, he summoned buses to send everyone home for the rest of the week.

Early testing has shown that the sickness is not caused by bacteria and is not a food-borne illness. Evidence points to a "very contagious" virus spread when people touch contaminated surfaces, said Bruce Dixon, director of the Allegheny County health department.

An outside company has been hired to disinfect the schools.

UNC SETTLES PART OF 1998 LAWSUIT FROM SOCCER PLAYER

North Carolina will pay a former soccer player $70,000 and enroll its women's soccer coach in sensitivity training in a partial settlement of a 1998 sexual harassment lawsuit, school officials said on Tuesday.

Debbie Keller was one of two former Tar Heel players who filed the $12 million lawsuit in 1998. The lawsuit names coach Anson Dorrance, three assistant soccer coaches, the university and three administrators.

In the lawsuit, Keller and Melissa Jennings contend that Dorrance sexually harassed them by asking questions about their sex lives and the sexual activities of their teammates. Keller further alleged that Dorrance made unwanted phone calls and physical contact that amounted to assault and battery.

Keller played at North Carolina from 1993 through 1996 and was national player of the year in 1996. Jennings was a reserve from 1996 through 1998.

SCHOOL CRACKS DOWN ON CONFEDERATE T-SHIRTS

Racial tensions intensified at a Caldwell County high school in recent weeks, prompting a crackdown on T-shirts with the Confederate flag on them, school officials said.

Fifteen students were sent home Monday from South Caldwell High for violating the dress code, principal Byron Jones said.

Students "were given a choice of going home to change or having another shirt brought to them. If they chose not to, they would be sent home," Jones said.

South Caldwell High School is 99 percent white, with eight black students and four to six Hispanic students, Jones said.

he referred to as the "Sept. 10 agenda." He said as the United States was going to bed on Sept. 10, no one worried about genocide, wars and global health crisis. Jentleson said that date was the last in which Americans did not deal with world affairs on a day-to-day basis.

Jentleson went on to say that up until Sept. 10, the United States was in a euphoria-state that lasted from the late 1980s, with the fall of the Berlin Wall, until the early 1990s, with the release of Nelson Mandela.

Jentleson believes that all that changed when the first plane crashed into the North tower of the World Trade Center.

Jentleson had the audience pull out a one dollar bill and turn it around to the side of eagle. He said that one talon of the eagle holds arrows signifying war and the other talon holds olive branches representing peace. Jentleson said that the Bush administration hasn't necessarily played both sides of the eagle.

He said that after Sept. 11, there was enormous global empathy and "a sense of we're in this together."

Jentleson said that the "military won the war, but we're losing the peace."

He continued by speaking of the debate between unilateralism and multilateralism. Jentleson accused the Bush administration of doing unilateralism when possible and multilateralism when necessary.

Director of the Institute of Public Policy at Duke University Bruce Jentleson lectures on America's role as a global power.

Jentleson believes "it is should be multilateralism when possible and unilateralism when necessary."

"No matter how powerful the United States is, we can't solve and deal with all the problems," he said.

He also discussed the recent bombing in Madrid, Spain, and the issues between the Israelis and Palestinians.

"Terrorism can't be overestimated but at the same time, can't be underestimated as well," he said.

"I felt the speech was overall upbeat and positive," Marybeth Taham, an interpersonal communications major said.

Jentleson said he wanted to approach both sides of the issue carefully and be respectful of other's opinions.

Freshman Melissa Ward-Kracher in the First Year College thought Jentleson did a good job discussing both sides.

"He presented facts to the audience and let us take it from there," she said.

The lecture ended with a questions and answers session.

Jentleson is currently the director for the Terry Sanford Institute of Public Policy as well as a professor of public policy and political science at Duke University. Prior to that, he was a professor of political science at UC Davis, a senior foreign policy advisor for Vice President Al Gore for the Gore-Lieberman 2000 Campaign, a special assistant to the director on the U.S. Department of State Policy Planning Staff and a Cornell University graduate.

He has also published many books and articles such as "American Foreign Policy: The Dynamics of Choice in the 21st Century" and "Perspectives on American Foreign Policy: Readings and Cases."

Jentleson's parting words for the night were, "through what we've learned from the past, what we sometimes believe is entirely impossible is really entirely doable."

LANGLEY

"I don't sleep 15 hours to get this energy, I get my energy from people smiling back at me."

TECHNICIAN: How will you help promote the appropriations process next semester? And how will you ensure that students get their money quickly?

LANGLEY: I will promote appropriations next year by going and speaking with every single student organization, or student club or fraternity or sorority. If I can hang up signs all over campus saying, "Vote for Will," "Think Big, Vote Big Willy," "Think out of the Box, Vote Will," then I can sure get the word out that Student Government gives out over $70,000 a year to clubs. And how will I get the money out quickly? Obviously that is a huge problem this year, the coordinator for appropriations is not doing the job as well as he should or as well as my staff would do. Student Government has two accounts, one that we can write our checks out of that has $5,000 and we have another account where the bulk of our money is set aside. I will make pre-arrangements with the NCSU Finance Department, so the minute I give them the line-by-line item of how much each club gets and what the check needs to be made out for and who, they can write it. So we'll have pre-arrangements with them. It all goes back to diplomacy that I'm going to work with everyone. That's what this campaign is about, that's what this cause is about, that's what this movement is about.

TECHNICIAN: Do you plan to increase appropriations by cutting other areas in Student Government? If so, what would you cut?

LANGLEY: We need to be very careful about cutting budgets in SG. We don't have a budget problem, we have a spending problem. We need to go through every single line item on the budget and talk with people whose budget it is and ask them if they can spare any. Because if they can and we keep spending less money than we budget, then it keeps going to the General Trust. Right now, there is close to $70,000 in this account that is called the General Trust that we cannot touch and we cannot spend. So, as student body treasurer, I will urge the senate and urge all SG to spend that money; to spend all of the General Trust's money on clubs and organizations. So, who's to say what is a good cause as far as the SG budget. We really need to be careful about taking away money from SG, from the SBP, we cannot take that money away from him, but we will look into it and see if he has any extra money that he can spare to give out to the organizations. Because if we build better, stronger organizations then that means we build a better NCSU and that's what we need to do.

TECHNICIAN: You've only had one year in senate. What makes you qualify to be treasurer after so little time?

LANGLEY: You're right, I do have one full year of service in the senate, and I have done a whole lot in that one year. I am the vice-chair of the Campus Community Committee, and that doesn't mean a lot to you possibly, but it does mean I helped lead the fight to keep block seating, I'm leading the fight in senate against the Nuisance Party Ordinance and that's a lot of fighting for what's right. Since I was 13 years old, I worked for a group of financial consultants, and we handled over $100 million dollars of real money. I know what it's like when people call in when the stock market just fell and they are saying, "What happened to my $100,000?" That's a phone call you don't want to get and that's a phone call I've answered, and I've passed on. I have the experience to know how important it is to keep our tuition low, not only for people here, but to ensure people for next year that they can afford to come to NCSU, and the year after that and so on. You know, my tuition and my fees and my meal plan and my board bucks, they all come out of my checkbook. So, it's personal to me. I know how important it is to fight against tuition and against fee increases. Finances are truly in my blood. My grandma, in 1986, retired from the N.C. State Finance Department. My dad spent 30 years in the financial planning business. Since 1992, I've owned my own company. I was barely tall enough or strong enough to start the lawnmower, but I did it. I know finances and I know about SG's almost quarter of a million dollar annual budget. This year I worked extremely close with the Treasury Department. I sponsored several new organizations. One in particular, we had a group of students who wanted to have a color guard with our band, so through the appropriations process, we gave them money and we gave them resources so they could go out and buy flags and they could buy uniforms. And I'm proud to say that next year they will be out on the field with the band at the football games. So I have the real experience and the real qualifications and the real record to be our student body treasurer because business as usual will not work.

organizations and he believes his work with Seth Lester, current student body treasurer, has helped him get a closer look at how the process works and what he can do to improve it next year.

TECHNICIAN: How will you help promote the appropriations process next semester? And how will you ensure that students get their money quickly?

PATEL: I think both of those are things that can be improved on, the publicity and speed of the appropriations process. Specifically as far as publicity, the forming of close relationships with student organizations will allow me to directly publicize to them. That's a particular topic that I think can be strengthened on as far as relationships with other organizations. That will make publicity really easy because it will come straight from the treasury right to the people who need to know it in the student organizations.

As far as speed, that will involve having one or two people work on being liaisons to the university.

I think a lot of the problems that come from speed are because of things from the University Budget Office. And also, one thing we'll do directly is work on making the length of appropriations shorter. So cutting it from the two or three-week process it is right now to shorter than that.

TECHNICIAN: Do you plan on increasing appropriations by cutting other areas in Student Government? If so, what would you cut?

PATEL: Definitely, I think it's important to know that the past two years when I was on the finance committee, I played a pretty strong role, especially last year, in helping to do that. We increased the amount of money that appropriations had from $65,000 to $70,000. I don't know a specific number that we'll increase it to this year, but it will definitely increase.

My goal is at least $75,000, so another $5,000. That will come from salaries for student body officers, and there are some smaller positions that get stipends and salaries and those will be cut mainly. There will be other avenues, but those are the main ones that the money will come from.

TECHNICIAN: You're running on a ticket with Tony Caravano and Will Quick. Why?

PATEL: Collaboration. I think that the possibilities for cooperation between, in particular, the three of us is going to bring really exciting things to Student Government next year.

I worked with Tony a lot last year, and I got to know Will Quick as of recently, and Will has impressed in a short amount of time and Tony impressed me in a short amount of time last year, and that's been backed up by the time we've spent this year working together.

BROWN

Lecturer Peter Hessling, a visiting associate professor of counseling education, focused on the impact of desegregation in the Durham area. Hessling provided listeners with a case study of a school in Durham that accurately portrays other cases across the south.

Anna Wilson, an assistant professor in education, research, leadership and counselor education at NCSU, focused on high schools that were desegregated in Austin, Texas. She reminded listeners that it has not been that long since desegregation and that we must continue to work for desegregation even now.

"Brown vs. Board of Education resulted in opportunity and better education," Wilson remarked.

Associate professor in education, research, leadership and counselor education Paul Bitting spoke about the impact on the Winston-Salem area.

Expressing his hopes of making people remember the importance of desegregation, Bitting emphasized that people often want to forget the past.

"We must bring the discussion to a very real and personal point for others," Bitting said.

He explained that there is a tendency for people to be naive in their longing for the "good old days."

Bitting, who lived and experienced the effects of Brown vs. Board of Education as a youth in Winston-Salem, said that in order to move forward people must forget about the good times of the past and instead remember the prejudices.

The panel also included NCSU students Carlos Goins, a senior in mechanical engineering, and Hamilton Brown, a junior in communications. Both are members of the Omega Psi Phi fraternity.

A question and answer session followed the panel discussion.

Elizabeth, a freshman in science education, showed up for Playboy's "Girls of the ACC." When asked why she showed up she said, "What girl doesn't want to be in Playboy?" The photographers and producer of the shoot said that they were booked for the week and when they were finished would head to Durham.

Naked ambition. Some people lack it completely, some people have a little and some N.C. State students are overflowing with so much of the quality that they're willing to show it to millions in an upcoming issue of Playboy. On Monday and Tuesday, representatives and photographers from the magazine interviewed around 50 NCSU students and prospective models for October's "Girls of the ACC" issue, which hits news stands on Sept. 12.

Started in 1953 by Hugh Hefner, the monthly magazine has a circulation of around 3.2 million and features photo spreads of nude women in addition to articles on entertainment, style and sports. The image of a black and white rabbit head wearing a tuxedo known as the Playboy Bunny has appeared on the cover of every magazine since its second issue.

Each year around the start of football season, the magazine publishes a spread of selected girls from a major NCAA conference. With Miami and Virginia Tech set to join the ACC this fall, two Playboy crews are currently navigating the East Coast hoping to find the perfect girls from every ACC university. While specific figures were not available, a Playboy spokesperson said that going into its 27th year, the college pictorial issue is one of Playboy's highest-selling and most-talked about issues each year.

Playboy conducted interviews in Raleigh at the Crabtree Valley Marriott. The interviews were open to all female NCSU students over the age of 18.

After girls from NCSU interviewed on Monday and Tuesday, crewmembers began whittling down a list of hopeful girls to four to eight future Playboy models. Led by photographer Kim Mizuno and a producer/freelance hair and makeup artist who goes only by the name Chelo, the crew hopes to make its final decisions by Wednesday evening. Mizuno will then begin shooting girls at various locations in Raleigh through Saturday.

Possible shooting sites include NCSU fraternity houses, bars and clubs.

On Monday the crew will repeat the entire process at Duke, then move on to UNC-Chapel Hill the next week followed by Wake Forest the week after that. According to Chelo, girls have the option to pose "completely nude, semi-nude, implied-nude or non-nude."

Semi-nude posers agree to pose topless, but clothed from the waist down, while implied-nude posers agree to pose nude but with a hand, arm or prop such as a sheet covering private parts.

Girls appearing in the magazine fully nude receive an amount between $400 and $500. Partially nude models earn between $200 and $300 while girls posing in clothes make $75.

THE INTERVIEW, UNDRRESSED

Chelo pulls a giant, foam Wolfpack No. 1 hand out of a plastic shopping bag and tries it on.

"I always liked these," she says. "They're the funniest things."

After a quick trip to Addam's University Bookstore, Chelo and an assistant transform Playboy's suite at the Marriott.

They hang a red NCSU blanket on a wall, staple red NCSU T-shirts to another and cover the tops of two lampshades with tiny gray NCSU cheerleading shorts. They place red and white pillows on the couch and loveseat so that soon, the room looks like it could be a waiting room at the Wolfpack Club's offices or the Murphy Center — minus the giant stack of Playboys on the coffee table and a girl wearing a tank-top, filling out a Playboy application on the couch.

Each girl must bring a form of identification, proof of enrollment at NCSU and a two-piece bathing suit to the interview. Upon arriving, she must fill out a short questionnaire that inquires about hobbies, sports she likes to play, any special achievements she might have or interesting comments about herself and her family.

After that, she must give her height, weight, bust and cup size, along with waist and hip measurements, shoe size and hair and eye color.

Next, Mizuno takes Polaroid pictures of her wearing a bikini. From there, all she can do is wait and hope Playboy calls her back.

Of course, that does not stop some people from calling Chelo's cell phone (which rings once every five minutes during a hour-long interview with Technician) to beg for a spot in the spread. The worst culprits of all, Chelo says, are parents.

"I hate that," Chelo says. "Sometimes they get irate and say 'You don't know what you're missing with my daughter.' That's why I don't like it, because if you're like that, I can just imagine what your daughter is like because you don't fall too far from the tree."

QUITE A RESUME BUILDER

While some people may wonder why a girl would want to take off all her clothes and let a total stranger photograph her bare skin, a Playboy ad insures that of the thousands of girls who have auditioned over the years and the many selected to appear in the magazine, many have gone on to become Playboy Playmates, models and actresses.

Others just want to do it for fun.

"It seems like it would be fun and I'm always up for new experiences," a girl, who preferred to remain anonymous for this story, says. "If you look at my job resume, it has about one of every type of job you can imagine and this is just another thing I could add."

After completing her interview and photo session, Erika Hinsdale, a junior in zoology, takes a seat at the dining room table in the suite. Icy earrings glimmer and dangle against her long blonde hair as she

A song that depicts Death riding in on a pale, white horse played over a montage of news sequences sets the tone for Zack Snyder's "Dawn of the Dead." As flashes of flesh-eating zombies wreaking havoc on a suburban community attack your visionary senses, the fast paced re-envisioning of George A. Romero's 1978 horror classic is introduced — or rather, endroduced — with a little help from Johnny Cash.

The difference, though, between most first time directors and Snyder is that he is tackling a subject held very dear to horror aficionados and is also remaking a piece of cinematic history. "Dawn of the Dead" is the second part of the Dead Trilogy which consists of the 1968 film "Night of the Living Dead," 1978's "Dawn of the Dead" and 1985's "Day of the Dead" — all written and directed by acclaimed horror film director, George A. Romero.

The film centers on a small group of survivors retreating to a suburban mall to start a new life. As they run out of food and the power goes out, the undead begin to find ways to break through the group's defenses. As time is drawing near for a complete unleashing of zombie hell on the mall, the group must make a break for an unknown island that is presumably safeguarded from the clutches of the living dead.

Although the film is predominantly fast-paced, it fits well to the style of filmmaking. One strong

Secret Window

STARRING: Johnny Depp, John Turturro
DIRECTED BY: David Koepp
PLAYING AT: Crossroads, Brier Creek, Carmike, Grande, Mission Valley

With big names like Johnny Depp and John Turturro signed on, a screenplay written by David Koepp ("Panic Room") and Stephen King's name nowhere present in the production of the film, it seemed like "Secret Window" would be pure cinematic gold.

"Secret Window" is a psychological thriller about a writer named Mort Rainey (Depp) who is going through a nasty divorce that cripples him to the point of losing the ability to write a basic sentence. The film opens with Mort debating whether to leave his Jeep parked in front of a motel. He eventually turns the Jeep around, goes into the motel lobby and grabs a room key and bursts into a motel room where he finds his wife Amy (Maria Bello) sleeping with another man. In a typical, nightmarish scene straight out of one of King's novels, Mort belts out a horrific scream right in the face of Ted (Timothy Hutton), Amy's lover, and Ted screams right back at him.

The film then cuts to a scene several years later, where we see Mort awaking from one of the many naps he takes throughout the movie. The separation from Amy has taken its toll on him, causing him to withdraw deep inside himself. His dreams seem to reflect this fact, and although we only get to see two of his dreams, they both show his feelings of isolation.

As if going through the utter thumbs through a 1998 issue of "Girls of the ACC." She ponders seeing her own figure in the magazine.

"It's an interesting opportunity," Hinsdale says. "I've never done any modeling or anything like that, so I'd just like to broaden my horizons."

Hinsdale learned about the interview from an advertisement in Technician and decided she would be willing to pose implied-nude after discussing it with her boyfriend.

"He is really understanding," Hinsdale says. "He was like, 'I don't want you to show everything, but I don't want to deprive you of something that could only happen once in your lifetime.'"

As for her parents, Hinsdale is still putting that conversation on hold.

The other girl, who identified herself only as a freshman Teaching Fellow, says her parents are fine with her decision and so is her boyfriend.

And what if she's picked? Well, that would be almost as exciting as getting picked to be a Teaching Fellow, she says.

But she's not too optimistic about her chances and insists that her roommate, who is also interviewing, stands a better shot at making it into the publication.

"I really don't have as good a chance as my roommate because I'm really not shaped as well as she is," the girl says. "I have the butt. She has the boobs."

LESS CAN BE MORE

According to Chelo, a slender woman with a pierced lower lip, a voluptuous endowment in the chest is not always what she is looking for in a model.

"Believe it or not, personality matters quite a bit," she says.

"We're not looking at breast size, so to speak. We're looking at proportion of the body, a good, fit collegiate look."

"We do like to mix it up quite a bit [ethnically], if we have that choice. We're not looking for a typical Playboy girl."

Only halfway through the first day of interviews with NCSU girls, Chelo is already feeling the grind of the demands of her job.

She's living out of a suitcase, the hotel doesn't have an adequate gym and it's nearly 3 p.m. and she still hasn't had lunch.

Fortunately a meal of avocados, tomatoes, chicken and salad is on the way and for the most part, Chelo can't complain about any of the girls she's seen from NCSU.

"We haven't had any overweight girls come in here today which is a really good thing," Chelo says. "A lot of times we're sweating bullets because we're lucky if we get one shootable girl. But we have to make it happen."

"The girls that have been coming have been really quite proportionate and really good. It's going to be tough to choose."

Each crewmember is looking for something different, but eventually, after laying all the girls' folders on the floor and studying each photo over and over, they will come to a consensus. Then Mizuno can get busy shooting.

On Monday, after leading a girl into a side bedroom, Mizuno waits next to the bed, camera in hand, as she changes into a bikini in the bathroom.

He's looking forward to moving past the interview session and start shooting on locations where he says he likes to do things different for the college tour.

"It's quite a different type of shoot because we're dealing with girls who have never posed before," Mizuno says. "It's a totally different feel from what we normally shoot when we shoot a Playmate or a fashion model."

APPALLING OR APPEALING?

So far, crewmembers on the photo shoot have yet to receive much opposition from campus leaders, students or women's groups, although, NCSU Women's Center director Frances Graham has not returned phone calls from Technician about the Playboy interviews at press time.

One male student, however, e-mailed Chancellor Marye Anne Fox about the advertisement in Technician, explaining that he was "appalled" to see the ad and that he could not believe that NCSU "would support such a thing as female students posing in pornography."

In an e-mail response to the student, Fox said that the First Amendment guarantees students the right to participate in the publication, though the university does not condone Playboy nor does it support the objectification of women.

But Hinsdale said she felt comfortable throughout the interview process and that she is not worried about being seen as an object.

"I had always liked looking at the magazine and thought that I wouldn't mind being in there," Hinsdale says. "The girls are beautiful and I think it's a classy magazine."

WINDOW

nastiness of all the paperwork and minor tidbits of a divorce and having a horrible case of writer's block weren't bad enough, a mysterious Southerner named John Shooter (Turturro) shows up on Mort's doorstep, claiming that Mort stole his story. Shooter threatens him with implications of bad things happening to those around him if he doesn't receive "satisfaction."

Although there was not a vast amount of problems with this film, a few things stuck out as too unbelievable to ignore.

First, the incompetence of the sheriff was a bit much. Granted, he is only a law enforcer in a small lakeside community that likely didn't see much action — his character is an old man who seems more interested in needlepoint than the concerns of the townsfolk.

Secondly, the filmmaker goes to great pains to tell the audience repeatedly that Mort and Amy's separation has been tough and that the divorce is even nastier. Yet, Amy calls Mort several times to check on him or "just to talk."

Overall, "Secret Window" is a decent movie, perhaps worth seeing if you are into mystery/thriller movies with plot twists. The surprise ending was a bit disappointing and, admittedly, not all that surprising if you're even halfway paying attention to the film, but Depp's and Turturro's acting somewhat make up for these plot holes.

DEAD

difference from the original film is the use of sprinting rather than lagging zombie. This factor further enhances the films sheer suspenseful elements similar to what was seen in Danny Boyle's "28 Days Later."

Had the film remained total gore and horror, it would have been quite unbearable. However, by incorporating bits of humor throughout the film tends to carry an emotional rollercoaster rather than a cinematic plunge.

"When there's no more room in Hell, the dead will walk the Earth," says a minister on a newsreel shown in the film. Well, on Earth, there is no more room for teen horror films like the "Scream" trilogy — let's open our arms and welcome the re-envisioning of the zombie genre.

TECHNICIAN'S VIEW

THE NAKED TRUTH ON CAMPUS

OUR OPINION: PLAYBOY IS WELL WITHIN THEIR RIGHTS TO ADVERTISE FOR MODELS ON CAMPUS FOR THEIR "GIRLS OF THE ACC" ISSUE, BUT MODELS SHOULD REALIZE HOW THEY WILL BE PERCEIVED WHEN THE ISSUES HITS THE STANDS IN OCTOBER.

The ad ran in Technician for the past week. "Hey N.C. State, Playboy is here interviewing!"

Playboy advertised on campus looking for female students to fill the pages of their new "Girls of the ACC" pictorial, which hits stands in September. The interviews were held off campus and potential applicants had to take photos in their underwear or a swimsuit.

Meanwhile, a controversy brewed on campus and concerned individuals sent letters to administrators. "How can the university let Playboy do this? How can Technician run ads for Playboy?"

Simple, we retain the right to run ads

The unsigned editorial that appears above are the opinion of the members of the Technician's editorial board except for news editors and are the responsibility of the editors in chief.

from any organization that pays for an ad in our paper. We also have the full support of the administration on this point.

(In the past, Technician used to run ads for cigarettes and beer. Not anymore.)

Besides, what can the university do to stop female students from posing? It is free expression, pure and simple.

There is a bigger issue here — the perception of the female students that pose in Playboy.

Playboy is the granddaddy of the "gentlemen's magazines" and is a venerable journalistic entity. Along with their pictorials, people say, they have great articles, too. But surrounding Playboy will be the issue of objectifying women.

Female students should realize this issue of Playboy would decide the reader's perception of them.

For 27 years, Playboy claims that the females that pose for Playboy become respectable members of the working world despite doing the campus pictorials. Posing in Playboy was a "slutty" thing to do about 30 years ago. Colleges would expel female students for posing in their college sweaters.

While that is not the case today, even in this enlightened, free-speech driven society, there is still a social stigma that comes with being a Playboy Bunny. That is all the world will see and think of the girl. A girl that poses in Playboy may be a biochemistry student, have a 4.0 GPA and in a member of Phi Beta Kappa. But there will still be that so-called "skeleton in the closet."

Playboy is not forcing anyone to pose nude in their magazine. In fact, girls that pose have the right to request clothed pictures.

In life, everything is about perception. There is a certain perception that comes with posing in Playboy.

Females should take into account the perceived opinion before striking a pose in front of the camera.

Make Student Government useful

Student body elections are less than a week away. Zack Medford offers his advice for improving Student Government this year.

There are major issues taking the forefront of this student body election. First, it will be about flyers.

Granted, none of us normal people ever really see flyers much less pay attention to them.

Still though, I'm sure plenty of trees will be sacrificed this year for this pointless exercise in futility.

Flyers will be big in this election. I wonder which flyer's design will win out. Perhaps the "flyers stapled in an x" or maybe the "smiley face flyer" pattern.

I can assure you I'll be keeping an eye on this, and keep you guys updated as it develops.

The major issue for this campaign of course will be the all important "who is more popular."

I love a good popularity contest, especially when the competition is based solely on who has a bigger buddy list.

I think we should nominate Chuck to run for student body president. The Chest will keep tuition low while battling the City of Raleigh's plans for "total prohibition for those under 30."

Other issues on the ballot will include "who misspelled their sandwich boards the least" and "who gave me the most freeze pops." I am excited to see how it turns out! This election is going to be one of a kind. One thing is certain, our school will never be the same after this STUDENT BODY ELECTION OF THE CENTURY.

Wait a minute. This election is going to be just like the election last year and the year before for that matter. In fact, in my tenure at NCSU very little has changed in the way of Student Government. Wait I take that back, like laserdiscs and non-online dating, Student Government might actually have become even MORE obsolete with this year's elite senate issues.

The issues that should really matter this year are revolutionizing Student Government. Our system has gotten so crappy that we can never hope to accomplish anything without completely changing the way things operate. It's like my dad always said, "Sometimes when you're in the desert, you just have to eat your horse and buy a new one."

Student Senate is too large and the system makes it too easy to elect someone who really sucks.

This year we have a plethora of people who really suck running our school. I use the word running loosely, it's more like "arguing about pointless things for hours."

Get rid of the general election for Student Senate president, and let's elect a student body president and vice president. The vice president will serve as the SBP's chief of staff and the two will run on a ticket. Also, we have no reason to vote for a student chief justice, so let's just let that position be appointed by the Judicial Board like it should be.

I also think the ballots should be updated. Since almost no one has a clue who they're voting for when they walk into vote, why don't we allow the candidates to have one last shot at winning votes? I propose that under every candidate's name we allow a one-sentence slogan. It would be easier to decide whether to vote for "Zack Medford - Keep tuition low, get rid of all the people who suck in Senate and bring beer back on campus" than just "Zack Medford."

We need a change. Since Student Government has gotten progressively worse as the years have gone on, it's time we send a message: "None of the above." We must make sure that we elect candidates that deserve our vote. There are many people in Student Government who work very hard for us every day of their lives, and these are the people we need most! The problem is that many more people who suck are destroying the efforts of these real leaders. The solution is simple. If you have no clue who deserves your vote, write in "none of the above." Don't vote for someone unless you believe in him or her and the direction they want to take our university. Let's take these Witherspoon "fat cats" out of office and put the real leaders back in!

Zack Medford plans to vote "none of the above" so many times he actually had a stamp forged. If you'd like to

A closer look at the news

In the post-investigative reporting era, reporter Greg Palast offers us journalism with substance. An Irew Dugan takes a closer look at this important, but little-known, reporter.

It seems these days that the concept of "investigative reporting," is all but dead. Perhaps journalists and reporters do still possess this drive to uncover

Watergate-like scandals, but they have neither the means nor the support to do so. Newspapers, particularly American newspapers, are filled with press briefings, nonsensical human-interest stories and political commentary that is often mellow and without substance. Just because investigative reporting has reached its twilight years should not imply that scandal is now a rare occurrence in politics. There certainly are sex scandals, however important that may be to some people. But beyond the scope of what insults your good tastes, there are still uncouth political deals that may offend more than personal sensibilities.

Greg Palast, a world famous reporter, has provided us a list of these malfeasants in his new book "The Best Democracy Money Can Buy." Palast was born in America, but works for a newspaper in England.

Palast records familiar and less-known claims in this watershed book. The most infamous assertion Palast presents is the dubious procedures taken by Katherine Harris, Florida's secretary of state during the 2000 election. Speculation surrounds some of the improper actions taken in Florida in an effort to ensure George Bush received the critical electoral votes for the state that would hand him the presidency. But Palast is not just yelling in the wind. He provides tangible proof that "[Florida] kicked up to 66,000 citizens off the voter registers five months ago as former felons. In fact, not all were ex-cons." The state of Florida had commissioned a company by the name of ChoicePoint to delineate between eligible voters (those who had not committed a felony) and those who were not legally entitled to a ballot. But ChoicePoint included people who were guilty of lesser offenses and thus still able to vote legally, a point the company concedes. At the time of the election, Palast notes, Florida was the only state in the Union to pay a private company to "cleanse" its voting rolls. Despite the grave errors committed by the company, Harris hired another outside firm for such services despite a law being passed by the state legislature barring that very action.

Palast photocopies much of his evidence in this story and the other horrifying tales he tells within the book, and when possible, he reveals his inside sources. While the account shared above does not point to outright corruption, it does at least reveal incompetence on the part of Katherine Harris, a public official who never had to answer to her poor choices.

Palast also shares his well-documented wrath for the International Monetary Fund, one of the key organizations involved in the "globalization" of the world. His criticism of the organization comes at a pivotal time: Joseph Stiglitz, a Noble-prize winning economist and one of Palast's inside sources, has just released a book called "Globalization and Its Discontents," which addresses many of the grievances Palast raises.

The two men show direct proof, particularly in Chile and Argentina, of the IMF making ridiculous demands on economies already falling into recession and suffering rising inflation. The IMF often recommends the privatization of vital industries that even capitalistic America either have nationalized or allowed a private, well-run monopoly, such as power and water. Meanwhile, the government of the nation is forced to drastically cut its spending during hard times, a measure almost all economists would object too. The decline in public spending, of course, leads to further loss in jobs even if it might help calm inflation.

Palast reminds his readers almost religiously that many of the IMF's policies, which may work in theory, are disregarded in the United States and Europe.

However, governments being directed by the IMF are forced to follow inane procedures to secure valuable loans, and when the reforms fail, as they did in Chile and Argentina, the IMF absolves all responsibility.

Palast also explores the California energy crisis of a few years back, the British government under Tony Blair and the efforts of both the Bush and Clinton Administrations to combat terrorism, and the revelations he describes may be a bit regretful.

Palast never irrefutably proves that every wrong is the responsibility of a single person, entity or political party. Of course, this is because that was neither his intention nor a viable reality. Perhaps readers will not believe every accusation he makes, or infer the connections that other readers shall. This book is not a diatribe against George W. Bush and the Republicans, but an inside look at the many faults and wrongs in our national and global system.

It is a must read for all those who believe that those in power aren't susceptible to misuse, and that includes everyone in the American journalism community.

Awesome opportunity with fast growing personal training company, looking for personal trainers and managers.

representing 33 schools across the nation traveled to compete in this event, which consisted of round-robin pool play, before each team were subsequently divided into divisions. The top team from each pool advances to the gold division, the second place team advances to the silver division, and the third place team goes on to the bronze division.

N.C. State finished undefeated in pool play, before playing against ACC foe Virginia in the first round of the gold division. A little drained physically and mentally from the earlier two matches, the Wolfpack could not fend off the Wahoos, who were later crowned runners-up in the tournament. In the consolation round, the Pack squared off against the University of Florida.

The Gators were the defending national champions, but State did not let the thunderous chants of many Florida fans affect their play. The doubles tandem of Matt Jones and Rob Campbell fought back to win a tough match 6-5 in a nine-point tiebreaker to get the Wolfpack started on the right track. On the women's side, the team of Anna Williams and Claire Comer came up short against their opponents losing 6-2, a task that seemed difficult for most teams to accomplish out. Grawey then beat out an infield hit and Pouk raced all the way home for the go-ahead run. Daniel Caldwell spelled Cretarolo on the mound and struck out Denson with runners at second and third to end the rally.

The Wolfpack had two rallies stall because of poor base running in the game.

In the fifth, the Pack had a runner picked off third base and another thrown out at third trying to steal. In the eighth, State had runners on first and second with one out and saw the rally cut short again when Cross picked off the runner at second and retired the first batter he faced to end the inning.

The Wolfpack begins a three-game conference series with Virginia Friday at 7 p.m. at Doak Field. The two weekend games are slated to begin at 2 p.m.

The No. 25 Cavaliers currently hold a 4-2 record in the ACC, a mark that includes a sweep of league power and defending champion Georgia Tech; State won last year's series at Virginia, two games to one.

Virginia is led by All-ACC hurler Joe Kosansky, who holds a 1.89 ERA and a 4-0 record on the young season.

Sherrill deserved better

Growing up, I spent most of my childhood hanging out with a kid that lived on my street named Ryan. We were, and still are, good friends. Ryan and I did crazy late '80s/early '90s things like wear neon-colored clothing, make fun of the John Kruk-era Phillies and listen to Kris Kross.

But mostly we played sports - everything from tackle football to capture the flag. But the older we got the more I noticed just how different our athletic talents were. Ryan could run faster, jump higher, throw farther and hit harder than me. Ryan was an athlete — I simply write about athletes.

The point of that little flashback is this — life isn't fair.

And on Sunday afternoon in Orlando, that fact had to be painfully obvious to Scooter Sherrill.

Sitting on the bench hobbled by an ankle injury for the sixth game in a row, Sherrill watched as State inexplicably collapsed in the NCAA Tournament against Vanderbilt behind poor execution and shady-at-best refereeing.

Julius Hodge may have gotten the most camera time as he sat on the bench with his head in his hands, showing his emotions in a way we have come to expect from Hodge. Sherrill sat almost stoically in contrast, though he could not hide the look of disappointment and despair in his face.

In the locker room after the game, Sherrill couldn't hide the pain. He sat with his head in his hands for about 20 minutes without saying a word. Eventually he would lift his head to say a few words to the reporters around him.

"It was one of the toughest things I've been through, by far, in my life," Sherrill said. "You love your teammates so much, you want to be out there with them. To see them fighting tooth and nail and come up short and you're not able to contribute, it feels real bad. To end my career the way I did [against UNC], being carried off the court, [is] real tough. Nothing I've been through [is] more frustrating than this."

Sherrill deserved a collegiate career with a better ending. He came out of high school as a McDonald's All-American in 2000, and with that label came lofty expectations. While his explosive offensive abilities made him a fan favorite, head coach Herb Sendek saw him as a defensive liability early on. He didn't play much as a freshman, where he only posted 10 points in his best game.

As a sophomore, Sherrill worked on his defense, and as his defensive intensity grew so did his minutes. He became a valuable component off the bench as State made its first NCAA appearance in over a decade. By his junior year, he had worked his way into the starting lineup, and State made a return trip to the NCAA.

In his four years, he has gone from defensive liability to defensive stopper. When State played against Florida State at the RBC Center in February, Sherrill shut down the Seminole's explosive guard Tim Pickett — holding him to five points on 2-of-8 shooting.

With N.C. State riding high in second place in the ACC, it looked like Sherrill's last year might bring something special to State basketball. Even after he crumpled to the ground on the last day of February against Carolina, hope remained he could play again.

In fact, had State gotten past Vanderbilt, Sherrill said he may have been able to play this weekend. But life, sadly, sometimes just isn't fair.

THE NO. 1 PLAYER FOR N.C. STATE, CONOR TAYLOR, IS A TRANSFER FROM DUBLIN, IRELAND.

The journey has been a long one for Conor Taylor. At first glance, of course there is a vast distance between Raleigh and Taylor's hometown of Dublin, Ireland, but Taylor has a particular destination in mind; a destination that is not measured in meters or miles, but in terms of growth and desire.

So far, his efforts have earned him the No. 1 position Jon Choboy's tennis squad, where Taylor has already defeated some of the top singles players in the nation.

Compare this success to his earlier victories with the Irish senior team, where he defeated a handful of world-ranked players en route to the No. 6 ranking in all of Ireland. This spotlight would cause some athletes to lose their desire, yet Taylor remains humble.

"I always had aspirations, you know, to be good," said Taylor, a 6-foot-1 junior transfer from Dublin City University. "I just practice hard and just got better and better."

Taylor has practiced since the age of 6, even in a country that has little room in its heart for tennis, playing second fiddle to more popular sports such as Gaelic football, hurling and soccer.

"[Taylor] is actually really

Conor Taylor (left), consoling Dennis Myers, recently defeated two top-20 opponents in singles action. Taylor and the Pack challenge North Carolina today.

good friends with another Irish player we had for four years," Choboy said. "I only saw him play on videotape before he came over, but the recommendations we got from our former player and coaches...they highly, highly recommended him to us. Not just because he was a good player, but because he was the kind of guy we would like to have — very hard-working kid, good student and would do a great job of representing us. "And they were right."

In only his first year with the team, Taylor still brings a wealth of experience to the court, to a young team that starts two freshmen.

"He came in with a tremendous amount of experience and the work we have done with him will be familiar to him," Choboy said. "He's the type of player that you are going to have to work very hard against to have a chance to beat."

Even more amazing is his dedication to the game he loves, for not only does Taylor give his best in matches, he regularly encourages his teammates to come out with him to hit more balls after practice.

"Sometimes you think that you're practicing so many hours and it gives so much good," Taylor said. "But if you practice smarter and train smarter, I mean you know, even an hour or two smarter is better than a sloppy three hours."

Taylor's mother, a former tennis player herself, first introduced her son to the sport and instilled a winning attitude that he holds true to this day.

But that's not all, she also cooks up some of the best potato dishes anywhere, according to Taylor.

"Favorite food? My mom's cooking," Taylor answered. "Potatoes. We Irish eat potatoes, there's a lot more [potatoes] over here, ain't there?"

Since arriving in 2002, inheriting only four players, Choboy has the Wolfpack heading in the right direction, with Taylor setting the example, knowing they have the talent to play with anyone in the nation.

And not only do they have talent, they have worldwide talent alongside Taylor, coupled with Englishman sophomore Will Shaw and South African freshman Tyghe Carstens.

"This is a great bunch of guys; everyone has great character, different personalities. I mean this guy over here is a head case," said a laughing Taylor, pointing to Shaw. "We just have to get along and take people for what they are. Everyone's different in this life."

And if you're Irish like Taylor, St. Patrick's Day has a whole, new meaning.

"I went to Tir na nOg [an Irish pub in downtown Raleigh]," said Taylor. "And Shaw, he dedicated a song to me, it was U2. I'm a big fan of U2."

Seahawks nip run-deficient Pack

Sports staff report

Junior southpaw Zach Kimball tossed two-hit ball over 7 1/3 innings and senior stopper Blake Cross recorded his 26th career save in UNC-Wilmington's 1-0 baseball victory over in-state rival N.C. State Tuesday night at Brooks Field.

The Seahawks won their second straight and improved to 12-9 with the win. The Wolfpack dropped their fourth game in five outings and now stand 15-7 on the season. Duke took two out of three games from State this past weekend in the ACC-opening series for both teams.

Kimball, a junior college transfer from Bellevue Community College in Shoreline, Wash., surrendered just two hits, walked three and fanned six in his most effective outing of the season. Cross retired the only batter he faced in the bottom of the eighth and worked out of a jam in the ninth for his sixth save of the season.

State starter Phillip Davidson did not allow run in five innings, scattering four hits while walking one and striking out six. Reliever Nate Cretarolo (2-1) suffered the loss after allowing one run on two hits in 1 2/3 innings.

Senior outfielder Chip Grawey led the Seahawks at the plate, going 3-for-4 with a pair of doubles and the game-winning hit. Jonathan Batts, Aaron Smith and Tim Preston had the other hits for the Seahawks. Junior outfielder Marc Mayor had two of the three hits for the Wolfpack; Matt Camp recorded the other.

The Seahawks scored what proved to be the winning run with two outs in the bottom of the seventh inning. After Aaron Smith fanned to open the inning, Cretarolo hit Matt Poulk with a pitch.

Tim Preston then singled through the box to move Poulk to second and pinch hitter Jon Davis struck out for the second
