WOLFPACK BASKETBALL & THE WOLFPACK CLUB: A WINNING COMBINATION

"The Wolfpack Club is a vital part of the continuing success of Wolfpack athletics. For over fifty years the Wolfpack Club has provided scholarship aid to our student-athletes and played a leadership role in capital improvements such as Carter-Finley Stadium, Case Athletics Center and the Weisiger-Brown General Athletics Facility, to name a few. Upon graduation we hope you will consider joining the Wolfpack Club and continue to be a part of the Wolfpack team, even after your student days. Join the Wolfpack Club!"

— Athletics Director Jim Valvano

"Let me personally invite you to join the Wolfpack Club. We offer a free one year’s membership to all graduating seniors. Just come by our office at the Wolfpack Center or fill out the application below to sign up. We would like to have you as a member."

Thanks . . .

The Agromeck donated the help of photo editor Woody Taylor and editor Mark Innman. Taylor let us have some of his photos and Innman designed the pagelines and a whole lot of other stuff.

Technician advertising manager Lib Seigh and her staff did an excellent job putting all this together. Thanks to Seigh, Cyndi Horink, Cheryl Zerof, David Carr, Paula Bouldware, Jeff Rudd and Alan Kane, we might even make some money out of this.

Production manager Tonya Peeples and senior editor Bob Reed both put in countless hours fixing my mistakes, and layout artists Lisa Coston and Crickette Purdie (known to her parents and the payroll people as Rene) cheerfully struggled to figure out what all those notes we scribbled in the middle of the night meant.

And all the other people who contributed their time to this project, THANKS.

Thanks for putting up with all of my demands and for not bashing my head in with a baseball bat.

"Thanks, Bud" to John Austin for late night treats and snacks (and to Krispy Kreme for being open).

N.C. State's sports information director Mark Boekelman, women's basketball information director Carter Cheeves and all the rest of the sports information staff were a great help. The pictures of Everett Case and Bill Lake came to us courtesy of the sports information office. (You're doing a good job, Mark. Pay attention. I probably won't ever say that again.)

Thanks to basketball coach/athletics director Jim Valvano and coach Kay Yow, who put up with our photographers at practice and gave us everything we asked for.

I'd especially like to thank the Technician sports staff; even those who's names don't appear in this edition, for keeping the rest of my job from falling apart when I was a walking basketball index. Without their help either the special or the regular paper would have fallen apart.

And managing editor Michael Hughes, who stayed up with me all night and most of another night, deserves the best thanks of all. We'll have to go out drinking sometime, Mike — when you're old enough. Meanwhile, we'll just have to settle for sipping whiskey from a dirty cup (or just out of the bottle.)

And last but not least, I'd like to thank God and Kentucky for combining efforts to create some excellent bourbon.

Bill Lake: an answer to Bill Walton?

Last spring, State's athletic department emptied its equipment rooms of old game jerseys and warmup jackets from several sports and sold them in front of the Student Supply Store (now known as the NCSU Bookstore).

Among the items sold were countless old basketball jerseys dating all the way back to the fifties. At seven bucks a pop—a bargain for sure—these old jerseys were guaranteed to trigger memories long since given up for dead.

Or so I thought.

While perusing the stacks of jerseys a kid nearby picked up a jersey opened his mouth and in a voice ravaged by puberty said, "Lake. Who the hell is Lake? I thought I knew State basketball pretty well. But I never heard of this guy.

How could anyone who claims to know a thing about State basketball not remember Bill Lake. State's answer to Bill Walton.

Alth Bill Lake a seven-foot white giant with shocking red hair, much like Bill Walton, unlike Walton, and most unfortunately for the Wolfpack Lake was completely unable to shoot, dribble, pass or catch a basketball. Although a year apart in age, Walton and Lake were several millennia apart in terms of talent.

Lake's playing days, if that's what you want to call them, weren't that long ago and I thought back to when I first started going to State games back in the mid-sixties. If this kid didn’t remember Bill Lake what would be made of names like Billy Mavredes and Tommy Mattocks and Billy Moffitt and Pete Aukel and Larry Worsley?

Those were the names I remember from the 1964 and 65 Wolfpack teams, the last teams coached by the great Everett Case. Thanks to the point shaving scandal a few years earlier, Case's last years at State weren't memorable ones which is too bad. One of the greatest coaches ever. Case should have gone out with a better ending.

Case died in 1966 after a 1-year record of 37-134. Included in that were six Southern Conference championships and four Atlantic Coast Conference titles. Nine of those 10 conference championships came in a 10-year span from 1947-56.

When Case stepped down two games into the 1965 season, Press Maravich took over for a couple of years and won 38 of 51 games and the 1965 ACC title. After stunning nationally ranked Duke in the tournament finals, Maravich and the Wolfpack players—Worsley, Mattocks, Moffitt, Peter Coker, Larry Lakins, Hal Blondeau and Roy Hodges among others—paid tribute to Case, who forged his reputation as a tournament coach.

A year later, Maravich left and Norm Sloan's sport coat collection took over as head coach. Sloan's first team was a star-studded cast that included Dick Braunher, Nick Tiftunovich, Paul Hudson, Sam Gealy, Joe Serich, Billy Kretzer, Bob Lewis and the ever-lasting Mavredes a group that dropped 19 of 26 games, perhaps not used to the glare given off by Stormin' Norman's gametime wardrobe.

A word about Sloan's sport coats. Actually, old Norm dressed pretty conservatively in his early years with NC State perhaps figuring that a 7-19 record combined with repugnant taste in clothing might offend the Wolfpack faithful and cost him his job.

Sloan didn't start melting camera lenses with those bright madras jackets until he'd pocketed an ACC title and had David Thompson stashed safely away on the freshman team. Now that's job security.

By the time I was in high school—Raleigh Broughton class of '70 if you must know—Sloan had added Van Williford, Paul Coder, Joe Dunning, Ed Leftwich, Nelson Isley, Al Heartley and—via Bradley University and the Keg—Rick Anheuser Quiet a group.

Williford's first recruit and an all-ACC selection in '69 and '70, stood 6-6 and played center until Coder came along in 1970. Leftwich had a million dollars worth of basketball talent, but his brain far too often indulged in deficit spending. He dropped off the team and out of school in 1971 and apparently hasn't been heard from since.

Anheuser made a name for himself one night by single-handedly nailing the Keg of a platoon of unruly Marines.

The spirit of Everett Case

When word went out that Anheuser was simply working on his man-to-man defense no one doubted it. Many of Anheuser's ACC rivals fared much worse than those Marines.

Before Coder left school, he showed his enterprising spirit and went into business with fellow forward Bob Heuts. Unfortunately, selling bags of marijuana at Pullen Park wasn't the kind of business that the Raleigh police looked favorably upon, and they arrested Coder and Heuts in the fall of 1971.

With a collective resume like that, you ask, how could that team lose? Well, the 1970 Wolfpack didn't lose often, winning the ACC championship and upsetting a nationally ranked team from South Carolina in the process.

That South Carolina team may have been the most universally despised team in ACC history. They not only got into more fights than the Philadelphia Flyers, their freshman team got into more fights than the Flyers as well.

One of my greatest memories ever at Reynolds Coliseum was the second bench-clearing brawl between the State and South Carolina freshmen in 1970. I particularly enjoyed Rick Holder's blind-sideding of Kevin Joyce, a heralded USC recruit who used to sit on the bench and sharpen his elbows with a steel file. Joyce's hands resembled a pair of blacksmith's anvils. You can guess what he used them for.

The 1970 South Carolina varsity won most of its fights that year and all of its regular-season conference games in the ACC finals. However, Dining and Anheuser each hit critical free throws and Leftwich scored the winning basket after stealing the ball from John Roche. USC's arrogant point guard, and the Wolfpack pulled off a 42-39 upset in double-overtime.

Bolton got the win and it was true.

Russian nationals invade Reynolds

Defeat 'Pack, 99-90

By Katrina Vaugh
Sports Editor

The Wolfpack men's basketball squad got its first chance for action Nov. 6, against the Soviet National team in Reynolds Coliseum.

The Soviets won, 99-90, but the loss didn't discourage Wolfpack coach Jim Valvano's expectations for the season.

"Other than losing the game, we accomplished everything we set out to do." Valvano said. "It was a great game for us. I told our kids the 'L' we got was for learning, not loss.

Senior guard Vinnie Del Negro played the kind of consistent game that a senior should play. He led the team in scoring with 20 points and had eight rebounds and two steals.

Chucky Brown had a strong performance, taking up the slack from a somewhat lethargic Charles Shackleford. Brown scored 17 points and pulled down five rebounds before fouling out early in the second half.

Avie Lester started at center for the Wolfpack and tallied 12 points, seven rebounds and a blocked shot in the 22 minutes he played.

Sophomore Brian Howard, a seldom seen forward last year, started the game and played 15 minutes - probably the most in a single game of his career.

Senior Quentin Jackson started at point guard and handed out four assists before Valvano started shuffling the lineup, with Jackson receiving less playing time as the game went on.

After the first five minutes, Shackleford, Kelsey Weems and freshman forward Sean Green came in for Lester, Jackson and Howard. From then on keeping track of who was in the backcourt was a full time job.

Everyone on State's roster played. With red-shirt Brian D'Amico and last year's permanent bench warmer Kenny Poston each pulling four minutes of time. Both made the box score - D'Amico with a field goal and Poston with a steal.

Freshmen Sean Green and Chris Corchiani had the best performances of the Wolfpack newcomers. Green tallied nine points and a rebound in 22 minutes on the boards.

Corchiani, who played 26 minutes at the point, scored 13 points, dished out five assists and recorded one steal with only one turnover.

Freshman Rodney Monroe took over the shooting guard spot for 17 minutes, getting three rebounds, two points and two assists for State.

"We accomplished what we set out to do and that's to play everyone on the team." Valvano said. "It would be great to be able to play about three preseason games to see how you're doing. It would be so helpful to play a few more like this one." Unfortunately for State, its next game isn't until Nov. 30. That one will count.

Soviet coaches very similar to Americans

Soviet National team head coach Aleksandr Gomelsky looking remarkably like Harry S. Truman. spoke to the media after the Soviets beat the Wolfpack, 99-90.

"This team (the Wolfpack) played very well is the best team we have faced so far. We played in Springfield against Illinois State and in Atlanta against Georgia Tech (pronouncing the 'ch' in Tech like the 'ch' in church) and this is the best team yet.

"This team very quick and jim (Valvano) is a great organizer of this quickness. They run an impressive fast break and have good shooters.

Gomelsky singled out Vinnie Del Negro and Chris Corchiani, referring to them as 'that white boy number 14' and 'that white boy number 13' as quick smart and good shooters.

He also complimented Charles Shackleford for "not allowing points in the center."

Gomelsky also commented nearly as boldly as Dean Smith would, that his team had not been playing at full strength.

"I feel we did not play badly. He said. "Of course we did not have our big boys. One is 7-4 the other 7-3 We usually play a contrasted controlled game by giving the ball to center. The game is organized for the big boys. Tonight he had to change our play We played a fast breaking game to give us the outside shot.

Before anyone gets overly sympathetic to the man with no big men a quick check of the roster shows two seven-footers one 6-11 players and two more 6-10 boys.

It seems that Soviet basketball coaches are a lot like American coaches.

Valvano piqued at missing all-Schnoz team

Lock your doors, fasten the deadbolts and shutter your windows, folks. N.C. State coach Jim Valvano is on a rampage.

Seems like the coach is a little ticked off at your friendly neighborhood sports writer for overseeing, or maybe climbing over, his nose for the annual all-Coaches Schnoz team. This is the fourth straight year UNC Coach Dean Smith has been graced with this honor. As usual, he beat out Valvano and Duke coach Mike Krzyzewski (Coach K.O) by a nose hair.

Valvano has vowed vengeance. Last year, Valvano was whining about how his loss hurts Wolfpack recruiting efforts. "It's not fair. It's s-s not." Valvano cried to last year's proboscis picker. (The past two pickers who graced this annual space have blown the coop. Apparently, they figured Valvano would someday change his bellowing to rage. They got out just in time.)

Since last year, however, the V-man has viewed one-too-many episodes of The Equalizer. "Edward Woodward is my hero," Valvano claims in an anonymous letter sent to these offices. "I saw him on Letterman the other night. Any man who can survive a heart attack and blow away fifty-three bad guys in next week's episode is awesome. You guys better watch out because I'm starting the V-qualizer next week. You got a guest shot."

But no writer worthy of this space is caving in to gang warfare and threats, even from Mr. ACC-Tourney himself. Which means this column better be finished fast or I can split.

Anyway, after all is said and done and dead. Deanose Smith still reigns as the top Schnoz in the ACC. Despite reports that mysterious late-night shipments of AK-47's, Uzis and M-16's are arriving at Reynolds Coliseum. And now, on to the other picks, with a short detour to Mexico.

The annual all-tiny team is graced this year by comeback ugly player of the year Keith "Sleestak" Gatlin, who was happier than ever when "Land of the Lost" was returned to local television. Gatlin sat out last year because of academic difficulties. Good to have you aboard, Keith. He's is joined by... See CRAIG, page 29

Gone, but not

Women must replace four stand-out seniors

The Wolfpack women's basketball team will have a long way to go in order to live up to last season's Atlantic Coast Conference Champions.

Gone from State's squad are the four stand-out seniors who led the Wolfpack to the championship trophy.

All ACC center Trena Trice, second-team all-ACC swing guard Annemarie Treadway, guard Carla Hillman and forward Angela Daye are all gone.

The four players combined for two ACC championships, four NCAA tournament appearances and a 90-33 record in their four seasons at State.

Trice averaged 18.3 points and 10.4 rebounds last year and dominated State's front-court. Treadway scored 17.1 points, collected 4.7 rebounds per game and had 39 steals and 58 assists for the year.

Hillman racked up 62 steals and 165 assists last season to go with her 5.1 points-per-game average.

Daye scored an average of 10.1 points a game and pulled down 6.2 rebounds a game.

With these four starters gone from the 24-7 squad, the Wolfpack faces a major remodeling project this year.
forgotten . . .

Men lose leader from championship team

The list of players missing from last year's Atlantic Coast Conference champion men's basketball team is almost as long as the list of returning players.

Senior forward Bennie Bolton, the only starter not returning this year, will be sorely missed by the young squad. Bolton led the team in scoring with an average of 15 points per game.

Mike Giomi, also a senior and sometimes a starter last year, averaged 7.1 points and five rebounds per game.

Last year's only other senior was Tevin Bins, who averaged 2.4 points and 1.6 rebounds in the 17 games he played.

Walker Lambotte, a small forward-big guard who started in over half of State's games, and guard Andy Kennedy, who played sparingly in 25 of the Wolfpack's 35 games, both transferred to other schools after last season.

Point guard Kenny Drummond left the team in the middle of last year. Drummond averaged 11.2 points per game while with the team and handed out 106 assists.

Clearly the team will miss Bolton the most, because he had what this year's Wolfpack needs most — experience.
Hope for success lies with Wolfpack assistants

By Mike Leek
Staff Writer

With the arrival of the 1987-88 basketball season comes an expectation for success. These hopes will lie not only on the shoulders of head coach Jim Valvano and the starting five, but also on the group of basketball minds that complement State's men's basketball program—the assistant coaches.

Ray Martin is an experienced player and coach who will begin his eighth season as a Wolfpack assistant. Martin began his coaching career as the head freshman coach at Howard University in 1977. From there he went into private enterprise until 1980, when he saw Iona play in Madison Square Garden.

Martin was impressed with Iona's style of play and with its head coach—Jim Valvano. Since that time, Martin has been an assistant to Valvano. Together they have brought a tradition of success to the Wolfpack.

As for Martin's expectations for the upcoming year, he feels that State not only has a good chance to win the Atlantic Coast Conference Championship for the second straight year, but that the squad has the ability to do well in post-season play.

Martin's dedication to the Wolfpack program is obvious. "When it comes to tradition we don't take a back seat to nobody," Martin said.

As for the future, Martin's goals are not unusual. He would like to see Valvano back in the head coach's chair, and for now he says he is proud to be "working for the best."

Martin is a native of New York City and played high school basketball at St. John's Prep High School. He then signed with Notre Dame, where he was a four-year letter winner at point guard from 1973-77. He was graduated from Notre Dame with a Bachelor of Arts degree in economics.

Dick Stewart is in his 19th year of coaching Division I basketball. His third year as a Wolfpack assistant. The Pittsburgh native has also coached at Fordham, Penn State, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Connecticut and South Carolina.

Stewart's association with Valvano came in 1967. When both men played guard for Rutgers under coach Bill Foster, now at South Carolina. Stewart graduated from Rutgers in 1969 with a Bachelor of Arts degree in political science.

Clay Moser has three years of coaching experience under his belt. He coached from 1983 through 1987 at Fergus Falls Community College, where he had played basketball before transferring to Winona State University. A newcomer to the Wolfpack system, Moser says he wants to "take the opportunity afforded and learn from Valvano."

"We have a good blend of veterans," Moser said. "People don't expect a lot of us, but they will get a lot of us."

Moser was graduated from the University of Wisconsin—Lacrosse with a Bachelor of Science degree in sports management.

Stan Lewter is also a first-year coach at State. He was an assistant coach during the 1986-87 season at East Carolina and was the head coach for five years at Southern Nash High School, where he instilled in his players an attitude of hard work and team play.

Lewter has high hopes for the upcoming season. "I've got a lot of people pulling for me," Lewter said. "My parents. Valvano and the other coaches. I'm proud to be at State and I want to do the best I can."

Lewter was graduated from Atlantic Christian College in 1980 and played basketball there after transferring from Lewisburg Junior College. After graduation, he played professional basketball in Europe for a year.
Assistant coaches to provide strong support

The success of the 1987-88 women's basketball team depends largely upon the guidance and direction of its two assistant coaches, as head coach Kay Yow will attest. Both are experienced basketball people and will provide strong support to a perennially winning program.

Ed Baldwin joined NCSU prior to the 1985-86 season after completing a sparkling coaching stint at Raleigh's own Broughton High School. During a six-year period from 1980 to 1985, Baldwin guided Broughton to four conference titles and two state 4A championships. His teams compiled an overall record of 124-26, an 83 percent winning percentage.

Following his final season at Broughton, Baldwin was named North Carolina Coach of the Year by the Greensboro Daily News.

Stepping up to a successful college program might have proven difficult for some people, but Baldwin handled the challenge well.

"Moving from high school to college required a lot of adjusting. Coach Yow helped make that transition smoother," Baldwin said.

In addition to coaching practice, Baldwin has worked with women's and men's basketball camps and is responsible for recruiting.

What does Baldwin expect from the women's squad this year?

"We have a lot of young people, and you never know how they will react on the court," he said. "Because they are young, they will hustle and we will surprise some people with our intensity."

"We look for Kerri Hobbs, Mery Lindsay and Lori Phillips to do the scoring, and Debbie Bertand will provide much needed leadership."

Baldwin, a North Carolina native, was graduated from North Carolina Central University in 1976 with a Bachelor of Arts degree in history. As an undergraduate, he started as a wide receiver for three seasons on NCCU's football team.

Karen Freeman is the other assistant coach. Freeman arrived at State during the summer of 1986. She is beginning her second year as a Wolfpack assistant.

"I'm very excited to be at State," Freeman said. "If I could have had my pick of any job, this would have been the one. I think it's a tremendous privilege to work with coach Yow."

Before coming to State, Freeman worked as an assistant women's basketball coach and head trainer at the University of Wisconsin-Green Bay. She was also a graduate assistant at Eastern Kentucky, where she received her masters degree in athletic administration.

On the Wolfpack's immediate future, Freeman said "It is difficult to project performance because we are so young, but she believes the Wolfpack's team unity and work habits will help them through the year.

"We will depend on Mary Lindsay for leadership. We also have a couple of players who can shoot the three-pointer - Lori Phillips and Nicole Lehman. This adds a new dimension to our game."

Freeman, a native of Lavonia, New York, got her Bachelor of Science degree in physical education from Canisius College in New York, where she started at point guard for three seasons.

While playing for the Lady Griffs, Freeman set school records in assists and in free throw percentage. During her senior year in 1985, Freeman was named co-captain. She was later selected an academic All-American.

No stars for this year's women

Wolfpack women to rely on teamwork, desire, a lot of heart

Wolfpack women's basketball coach Kay Yow is going into her 11th season at State with only four upperclassmen on the team. Three sophomores and five newcomers round out the Wolfpack's roster.

"This team won't look anything like last year's team," Yow said. "We'll have to pull together because there won't be any stars.

"We're going to be a team that relies on good teamwork and a lot of desire. This team will play with a lot of heart."

The Wolfpack's backcourt is the healthiest part of the team. Both Bertrand and Lindsay, along with sophomore Krista Kilburn, have the talent to score from the guard spots.

"Our backcourt will find a way to get their points. Junior Sandi Osborne and freshmen Nicole Lehmann and Gerri Robuck will back up Lindsay, Bertrand and Kilburn."

The Wolfpack's most vulnerable weakness is in the frontcourt. Sophomores Kerri Hobbs and Sandee Smith are Yow's only inside returners.

New look for Yow's squad
Won't look anything like ACC championship team

"We're looking for Kerri to be our big scorer and rebounder on the inside," Yow said. "Kerri is going to have to be that total package player for us and do it all."

"Sandi is going to have to help us on defense and boards," Junior Lori Phillips. forward Sharon Manning and junior walk-on Toni Hughes are the only backups for the forward spots. "We're hoping for big things out of Sharon," Yow said. "We're very excited about her."

"Lori is another person who can help us on the inside and she also can go outside and score facing the basket. She's an excellent shooter."

State had an excellent recruiting year, but lost some of what it gained when Andrea Stinson and Rhoda Mapp were forced to sit out a season because of Proposition 48. In addition to those losses, freshmen Krista Hull and sophomore Adrina Crichlow are both unable to play because of knee surgery.

"A key for us will be how well this team plays together," Yow said. "We'll have to have the best team effort we've ever had. Our players will have to know our system better than they've ever known it.

"I look for us to be an aggressive team that plays aggressive defense. Offensively, we'll see all the transition quite a bit. This team has good chemistry and a lot of enthusiasm."

"We will be a team that will get better as the season rolls on."
Fast-paced attack added to Wolfpack’s repertoire

By Katrina Waugh
Sports Editor

The Wolfpack men’s basketball team is trying to add a new dimension to its playing style this year. Along with the tricky half-court style of play State has become known for, Wolfpack head coach Jim Valvano is trying to install a full-court, fast-paced game plan.

He’s been working on his newest plan in practice and got a chance to try it out for the first time against the Soviet National Team in an exhibition game, Nov. 6.

“We played an up-tempo style of basketball,” Valvano said after the game. “We tried to utilize the entire court and use pressure. We have not done that in the past.

“It gave us an opportunity to see it, film it, go watch it and see the mistakes we made.

“We’ve always been a half-court team, a junk defense team in the past, and tonight we got totally away from that. It was new to us.”

Not that Valvano is thinking of trashing his old style, he just wants another option for his bag of tricks.

“It’s something we need in our repertoire,” Valvano said. “If it doesn’t work out, you can always go back.”

With only two seniors and four newcomers whom Valvano refers to as the Wolfpack’s future, now would seem like a perfect time to teach some new tricks.

Before the dog gets too old
Senior Vinnie Del Negro, last year’s ACC Tournament MVP, will move around the Wolfpack backcourt, probably spending most of his time in the shooting guard slot.

Senior point guard Quentin Jackson, who earned a starting spot late last year and guided the team through a six-game winning streak, will vie for playing time with freshman Chris Coriani.

Rodney Monroe, another freshman guard, and Kelsey Weems, a junior point guard, will also see court-time as the season progresses.

Sophomore Brian Howard will move to small forward to try to fill the vacant shoes left by Bennie Bolton, last year’s leading scorer.

“We have a lot of confidence in Brian, and we think he is going to be able to handle that position,” Valvano said. “He’ll get better and better with the more playing time he gets.

“We’re hoping that having four veteran starters will take some of the pressure off him.”

Freshman forward Sean Green and junior Kenny Poston will back Howard up at small forward.

Charles Shackleford and Chucky Brown along with Brian D’Amico and Avie Lester make up State’s front line.

Junior Chucky Brown, a 6-8 forward from Leland, N.C., has enough experience to go around.

Brown led State in both scoring (18 points) and rebounding (10 boards) in the ACC tournament victory over North Carolina. He earned second-team all-tournament honors, averaging 13 points and 8.3 rebounds per game.

Brown scored 17 points and hauled in five rebounds in State’s exhibition against the Soviet Union before fouling out early in the second half.

As a junior and returning starter, Brown believes his role on the team is changing.
"In my new role, I have to score more and rebound more," Brown said. "I personally will do whatever I can to win, I just don't want to do anything bad."
Like fouling out of the Soviet National game.
"I didn't want to foul out, but at the same time, I didn't want to slack off," Brown said. "If I'm going to slack off, I might as well not play."

But even as a junior, Shackleford has had trouble consistently producing.
Wolfpack center Charles Shackleford is expected to draw a lot of attention— and defenders— this season.
Shackleford averaged 13.9 points and 7.6 rebounds per game last year and was named to the all-ACC tournament squad.

The 1986-87 marked the first time in Atlantic Coast Conference history that the men's and women's basketball champions were from the same school—N C State.

Neither the Wolfpack men nor the women dominated the ACC during the regular season, but both teams won the conference tournaments, which determine the league championship.

Ironically both State's men and women beat the regular season "champion" in the tournament finals.

Both teams advanced to the NCAA Tournament and both came away with nothing but fond memories.

In spite of the NCAA results, the Wolfpack men's and women's basketball teams are the undisputed champions of the Atlantic Coast Conference. Here's a look at State's 1986-87 seasons:

Men

N.C. State's men's basketball team took the 1986-87 season like an Olympic skier takes a jump.

The Wolfpack started at the top, swooped swiftly and surely downhill, then soared to the Atlantic Coast Conference championship.

State started its season with a 96-84 win over eighth-ranked Navy at the Hall of Fame Tip Off Classic in Springfield, Massachusetts. The Wolfpack went on to the Great Alaskan Shootout, where it won two of three contests, losing only to Iowa, then ranked in the nation's top ten in overtime.

The Wolfpack rolled easily to a 12-4 record. With senior Bennie Bolton and sophomore Charles Shackleford each scoring in double figures, almost every outing before the team started "downhill slide." Shackleford and Chucky Brown both suffered ankle injuries just before the Wolfpack traveled to Chapel Hill to face the number one ranked Tar Heels for the first time. The Heels took advantage of State's injuries to hand the Wolfpack a 96-78 drubbing.

Point guard Kenny Drummond kicked in a 28-point performance and Brown pulled down a season-high 12 rebounds to give State a 87-74 win over Duke in its next outing, but it was the last glimmer of hope the Wolfpack saw until the end of the year.

State went on to lose 10 of its next 12 games to Kansas, Oklahoma, DePaul, North Carolina, Louisville, Clemson, Georgia Tech, Duke and Virginia twice.

The fact that those teams could make up the honor roll of collegiate basketball didn't do much to improve the Wolfpack's standings or its chances for post-season play.

During that period, State was shooting in the thirty percent range as a team and was struggling on the boards.

Drummond jumped ship in the midst of the Wolfpack's problems. Coach Jim Valvano juggled Vinnie Del Negro and.

Coach Kay Yow and the rest of the Wolfpack women storm onto the floor after winning last year's ACC Championship. The defending ACC Champions lost four key seniors from last year's title team, including all-ACC Center Trena Trice and second team all-ACC Annemarie Treadway. Rutgers ended last year's season with a 75-60 victory in second round NCAA action.
Walker Lambiotte in the starting point guard position before settling on junior Charlie Jackson.

The Wolfpack then beat up on hapless, not to mention winless in the conference, Maryland. 85-72 and Shackleford scored a season-high 28 points and pulled down a season-high 17 rebounds to lead State to an 87-76 overtime win over Wake Forest.

The Wolfpack was airborne.

State capped off the regular season with a 86-76 win over Chicago State and headed for the Atlantic Coast Conference Tournament.

State 6-8 in the ACC, was seeded sixth in the tourney, just ahead of 2-12 Wake Forest and 1-14 Maryland.

With a 17-14 record, the only way the Wolfpack was going to return to the NCAA tournament for the third year in a row was to win the ACC tournament, receiving the automatic bid that goes to the tournament champion.

Bolton scored 19 points to lead the Wolfpack to a 71-64 overtime win over Duke in the tournament’s first round.

Shackleford, with 16 points and 10 rebounds, and Del Negro with 15 points and six boards, added to the Wolfpack effort.

State's excitement wasn’t over.

The next day the Demon Deacons of Wake Forest took State to two runaways before falling 77-73.

The scene was set for the championship game.

State would face archival North Carolina for the Atlantic Coast Conference Championship. The Tar Heels were already assured of an NCAA bid and had beaten the Wolfpack in both of their regular season contests.

State needed the win to get into the NCAA's.

The Wolfpack battled to a 3-25 halftime lead but North Carolina came rolling back, shooting 57.6 percent for the second half.

The teams traded a single-point lead late in the game. Del Negro hit two free throws with 14 seconds remaining in the game to give State 65-67 lead. A lead Kelsey Weems preserved by keeping North Carolina's top gun, Kenny Smith, away from the ball in the final seconds.

And so the Wolfpack came away with its tenth ACC championship and a bid to the NCAA tournament.

Del Negro, who averaged 14 points, 7.7 rebounds and 3.3 assists for the season, was named the Most Valuable Player for the tournament.

Wolfpack watchers found themselves reminiscing about the 1983 Cardiac Pack who defied the odds to win the national championship. Could the Wolfpack repeat the performance?

No. 19 State went up against the Florida Gators of former Wolfpack coach Norm Sloan, who coached State to its 1974 national championship.

And it was the Gators who prevailed and ended the Wolfpack's ACC championship season by a score of 82-70.

Women

The 1986-87 women's basketball team lost only two games in Reynolds Closures on its way to winning the Atlantic Coast Conference Championship.

The Wolfpack which was 14-4 in the ACC and 24-7 overall, won the championship from regular-season leader Virginia in the tournament finals.

State started its season at the Rotary Invitational Tournament in Orlando, Fla. defeating Western Michigan, Fairfield and South Carolina.

Center Trena Trice had three excellent games, averaging 21 points and more than 10 rebounds a game.

Then the Wolfpack lost to Tennessee in the first round of the NCAA Tournament before returning to Reynolds where they beat UNC Asheville and then topped league leader Clemson in South Carolina.

State returned to the tournament road this time for the Buckeye Classic in Columbus, Ohio where Tennessee, Ohio State, and Indiana fell victim to Annemarie Treadway's power surge. Treadway averaged 22 points in the first three games.

Penn State beat the Pack 75-73 in the tournament finals in spite of Trice scoring 20 points and pulling down 19 rebounds and Treadway adding another 20 points to the Wolfpack effort.

The Wolfpack returned to Raleigh for only the second time the Pack 75-73 in the tournament finals in spite of Trice scoring 20 points and pulling down 19 rebounds and Treadway adding another 20 points to the Wolfpack effort.

The Wolfpack returned to Raleigh the following year, beating Clemson in Reynolds and losing to Virginia on the road.

State started off a six-game winning streak with wins over Georgia Tech and North Carolina East Carolina. Duke Maryland and Wake Forest all fell to the Wolfpack. Not all of the wins were easy ones.

Maryland took State into overtime before bowing out.

80-78.

Old Dominion ended State's streak with a 77-63 win then Duke's Blue Devils topped the Wolfpack, 76-75 at home.

State rebounded with a string of four wins: Virginia, North Carolina, Maryland and Northern Illinois. The Wolfpack dropped a loss to Wake Forest in Winston-Salem, then won each of its next six games, including the conference championship and the first round of the NCAA Tournament.

State, which had finished second to Virginia in the regular season standings, had to beat North Carolina and Clemson to get into the tournament finals and against the Cavaliers.

Trice lead the team in both scoring and rebounding against the Tigers with 18 points and 11 rebounds.

Carla Hillman led State against North Carolina with 18 points and five rebounds. While Trice pulled in a game-high 14 rebounds. Treadway was a close third scoring 17 points.

State exploded for 19 points against Virginia and Kerri Hobbs lead the squad on the boards with nine rebounds. Debbie Bertrand contributed 10 points to State's winning effort.

Debbie Bertrand contributed 11 points to the Wolfpack's 87-76 win over Virginia for the conference championship.

The win also earned State a trip to the NCAA Tournament. The Wolfpack beat Villanova in Philadelphia's Spectrum 88-80 to survive the tournament opening.

But Rutgers ended State's season with a 75-60 drubbing in which Trice scored a season-low four points.

'Pack to mix fast and slow playing styles

You don't want to inhibit talent,' Wolfpack coach Jim Valvano said of Shackleford. "I think that judgement is the difference between a good player and a great player - judgement and consistency of effort.

If you can get good judgement and consistency of effort, maybe consistency of results will follow.

Avie Lester, a 6-9, 210 pound sophomore center, started in place of Charles Shackleford in State's exhibition game against the Soviet National Team and saw a good deal of playing time in that game.

Avie Lester has played extremely well in practice and he earned what he got,' Wolfpack coach Jim Valvano said. 'He's strong and effective. He's improved a lot.'

Last season Lester averaged three points and 1.7 rebounds a game, blocked nine shots and never started.

In the exhibition game he scored 12 points, pulled down seven rebounds and blocked a shot.

Regardless of the personnel, Valvano plans to enlarge State's playbook with his new style.

'Any way you look at it, we want to be better in February than we are in December,' Valvano said. 'And hopefully we'll be at our peak for the ACC and NCAA tournaments.'

Parking services provides efficient traffic control

Wolfpack Hoop Season is on us again as fans gather at Reynolds Coliseum to "Back the Pack." One of the concerns that many fans address is parking. The Division of Transportation provides traffic officers and attendants to make parking for home basketball games as efficient and effective as possible. You, as fans, can do your part to facilitate the ease of getting into and out of these Wolfpack games. To avoid missing the "tip off" for any of the home games here are some tips for basketball game parking:

1. Parking for the general public is provided in the East Coliseum Lot, along Cates Avenue, Morrill Drive, Harris Lot, Lee Bragaw, and the West or Fringe Lot.
2. If you are planning to arrive earlier than 30 minutes prior to "tip off," there is every possibility that you may park in the surface area surrounding the Coliseum. However, if you arrive later than 30 minutes prior to "tip off," your best bet for parking convenience is to take the most direct route, as indicated on the map, to the Harris Lot, West Lot or the Lee Bragaw parking areas.
3. From US 1-64 Reṅline to Western Boulevard East, turn left onto Dan Allen Drive and Park in the Harris or West Lots. Drivers can bypass Dan Allen by turning left on Morrill Drive and then right onto Cates Avenue to park in the East Coliseum Lot or lower level of the parking structure.
4. From Western Boulevard West turn right onto Pullen Road to reach Cates Avenue and from Avent Ferry enter the Campus on Morrill Drive and Park in the East Coliseum or Harris Lot.
5. Please avoid the North Campus area for all weeknight games. The North Campus area is congested with parking of faculty and students during night classes, special seminars and speaker presentations. If parking in close as possible to the Coliseum, as close as possible to the "tip off" moment is one of your priorities, you can purchase a Priority Season Basketball Pass from the Division of Transportation. The pass costs $30.00, or the equivalent of $1.50 per game for each of the 20 home games. Traffic Officers and parking attendants are directed to look for the Season Parking Pass and provide direction directly to the Coliseum Bay Lot and the Parking Deck.

Coliseum Bay Lot and the Parking Deck. With the Season Pass you are guaranteed a parking space in the parking deck and adjacent surface lot right up to tip off time.

Certain bays of the Coliseum Lot are reserved for the Handicapped, newspapers, media, and athletic staff. We ask that fans avoid these areas in consideration to those with special needs and reservations.

Backing the Pack is a great NCSU tradition and we encourage and support the Wolfpack and their basketball efforts. However, to avoid the anxiety and frustration of receiving a parking ticket or coming out of the game and experiencing you car missing due to towing, do not park in the NO PARKING areas. These areas are monitored and vehicles illegally parked will be ticketed and/or towed. No parking areas include the vicinity of a fire hydrant, dumpster, on the sidewalks, blocking a driveway, blocking driving lanes, parking in a manner that would prevent access to a fire lane, traffic lane, blocking a crosswalk, blocking an intersection, blocking other vehicles, parking on the grass or on landscaped areas and parking in a handicapped access area unless the vehicle is handicapped marked. When coming to the Wolfpack basketball games, share a few extra minutes walking from a regular parking space with your friends rather than sharing the frustration of a ticket or having had your car towed after the big win. Celebrations shouldn't be hampered by the last minute rush and poor parking. The cost of a violation for illegal parking is $10.00 per ticket, the cost of towing is $35.00 per vehicle.

When you arrive within 8 miles of the general campus vicinity tune your car radio to station 1610 on the AM dial. The Transportation Information System, or TIS network, will be broadcasting up-to-the-minute parking and traffic information. The traffic information is repeated on a two minute interval to provide you with information that will assist in your getting quickly and easily to that ever important "tip off" moment.

The Division of Transportation encourages you to come to Reynolds, support the Pack, and have a great basketball season.
Craig Neal: a fifth-year wimp

teammate Rudy "I'm so self-conscious I spend my time on the bench and even it gives me a cold shoulder," Archer.

Never fear. Wolfpack faithful. N.C. State is represented on this team as well - namely by Charles Shackleford. Rounding out the first (and only) team is Georgia Tech's Anthony Sherrer and UNC's Pete Chilcatt. Both were rumored to be in hiding. Both mothers were rumored to be ecstatic.

Moving right along, this year's all-Name team includes not one, not two, but 9 players. Duke's Alaa Hudson Abdelnaby tops this list. Contrary to popular belief, Alaa is not the guy everybody in the Persian Gulf is fighting for. That's Allah. He does, however, claim to be King of Jordan. Alaa is joined by teammates Quin Snyder, David Johanning and Coach Mike (what Eastern bloc nation is that name from) Krzyzewski. Rounding out the list is Virginia's John Crotty, State's Kelsey Weems, Clemson's Elden Campbell, Maryland's Teyon McCoy and Georgia Tech's David Boisvert.

In honor of amicable international relations, not to mention the USSR National Team's recent successful invasion of Reynolds Coliseum, we've decided to name a subsidiary all-Name team, the all-Russian sounding Name team. This roster is kind of short-handed, consisting of Duke's Greg "Soup" Koobek, Koolbek and Maryland's Mitch Kassoff. Is spying the real reason lefty left in such a hurry? We'll never know, but the D.C. area is full of potential targets.

Speaking of targets, that's what Craig "Noodles" Neal, who despite his off-season time doing The Georgia Tech rifle team coach claims no one has pegged Neal yet. Best reusable target we've ever had makes my boys work harder," he said.

This is the fifth straight year the 6-5, 166-pound featherweight has weighed in below the limit. He's not the only Tech wimp, as 6-1, 148-pound John "soda straw" Martinson will attest. Martinson's working on getting off the team, though, having added an extra pound since last season.

Speaking of growing Quin "Slim" Snyder, despite his best off-season efforts, once again, suits up for the wimps. Seems Snyder spent the summer drinking a lot of milkshakes. He grew from 6-2, 160 pounds to 6-3, 170 pounds (unless the Duke Sports Information office spent its off-season revising its tape measures.)

It doesn't matter. Slim Ten pounds doesn't make a temperature difference to our steady eyed panel. Quinn's teammate John "Burgin" Burgin joins the team as well. At 70, 215 pounds Burgin is Duke's answer to Chuck Nevitt.

Steve Bucknall makes the all-Wimp team by virtue of a technicality. Anybody who needs a 6-9, 250-pound potential All-American to pick a fight in a bar deserves the honor.

Speaking of 6-9 potential all-Americans, this year's winner of the annual North Carolina salvia spitting contest is the one, the only, the flattest himself - UNC's J.R. Reid. He's the only member of the all-Insert team as well.

Now, the conclusion. The ending. The tradition. The all-Schnoz team. This one's bound to be a killer with three Tobacco Road coaches sniffing out victories. Over again, the nasal head coach is Blue Bell's very own Deanne Smith. N.C. State's Jim "The Godfather" Valvano and Duke's Coach "K.O." Krzyzewski are assistants.

The all-Star cast of the all-Olfactory players include State's Vinny Del Negro, Maryland's Derrick Lewis, UNC's Rodney Hyatt, Duke's Phil Henderson and Phil's teammate George Burgin.

Burgin's nose really isn't that big, it's just geeky.

— Michael Hughes

Smith is all smiles after nosing out Coaches V and K.O. for the annual all-Schnoz team. As usual, Smith won this Technician tradition by a nasal hair.
Hot Summers, Cold Tea and Basketball

By Jeff Cherry
Staff Writer

The first thing newcomers to North Carolina learn is to enjoy (or at least tolerate) hot summers and cold tea. Next, they learn to enjoy ACC basketball and, barring that, at least understand its grip on the local populace.

Some say that true basketball fans are a product of heredity rather than environment. They persist in spouting inane little rhymes like "I’m Tar Heel born and Tar Heel bred. And when I die... etc.

Kinda makes you wish they would die, just like their team does every March.

This attitude, of course, is provincial and narrow-minded, and indicative of the mentality in that quaint village down Highway 54.

Anybody, even a Clemson graduate, can become a hoops aficionado, although Clemson graduates probably can’t pronounce the word.

To understand the ACC basketball fan is to understand the conditions in which he or she grew up (the environment, that is).

The earliest game I remember is State’s 1974 NCAA tournament game against Pittsburgh.

During the game David Thompson crashed to the floor and was taken to the hospital, only to return at the end of the game with his head bandaged to inspire his teammates to a 28-point win.

I was in first grade, and already was a devoted Pack backer. Of course, it was easier back then. Dealing with all those Tar Heels in Mrs. Woolard’s class. This was before the days of O’Koren and Worthy and Jordan. We always beat them, an insuperable fact that made their elaborate excuses and smug superiority a joke.

My bed-time at that age was 5 p.m., a constant source of irritation since that was when the week-night games started on the C. D. Chelsey Network. I continually risked spankings by watching.

Some nights there were double-headers which started at 7. But usually that was the less interesting match, featuring such perennial doormats as Clemson or pre-Sampson Virginia being beaten by teams I detested like Lefty’s Maryland Terrapins and, of course, the Heels.

But then there were the stirring defeats - games so devastating that all true fans carried them around in their memories. They are permanent emotional baggage, like the chains carried by Scrooge’s partner Jacob Marley.

For the Wolfpack follower, there were many such games: the 109-108 triple-overtime loss to Maryland in the first round of the 1978 ACC tourney; the loss to Kansas in the 1986 NCAA Midwest Regional Championship; when the Pack lost a seven-point lead in the final ten minutes to lose the game and a chance at the final four.

But my most devastating loss - the one I still gnash my teeth and pull my hair out over - is the 1979 home game against Carolina.

In front of my TV, I watched with joy as State rallied from 21 points down at halftime to take a 69-68 lead on a 25-foot jumper, and then gained possession on a missed shot by UNC’s Dudley Bradley with 14 seconds left.

Then I watched in horror as Bradley stole the ball from Clyde “the Glide” Austin in the backcourt and dunked it to seal the win for Carolina. I can still relive the closing seconds of that game in my mind - in color.

Years of ACC TV games have done strange things to my mind, especially when its down to the final seconds, a time out is called, and there is yet another Jefferson-Pilot or Holly Farms commercial.

Since I’m such a nervous wreck about the outcome of the game, those ads get branded into the part of my brain normally reserved for traumatic experiences. If I ever get in a car wreck or something, I’ll probably hear “Sail with the Pilot” instead of seeing my whole life flash before my eyes.

Frank Purdue can feed his chickens all the marigolds they can eat, but he’ll never beat out Dinah Shore until he starts buying those touchdown ads.

Outsiders are perhaps most bewildered by the way the entire state shuts down on that weekend in early March. They should realize that there are three major holdays in Carolina: Christmas, Easter, and ACC Tournament Weekend.

Sure, we all had to go to school on Friday, but all teachers had television sets in their classrooms. So much for educational TV. People don't understand this obsession, and point out that the tournament is meaningless, since four or five conference teams go to the playoffs now.

But the diehard fan will observe that this development only moves the drama from the championship game to the first round.

The formula for becoming an ACC basketball maniac is quite simple. Watch several hundred games and several thousand Jefferson-Pilot commercials, acquire a distaste for men in light blue, and develop a sense of eternal optimism that allows for hope no matter how lopsided the score.

And, oh yes, a couple of tickets to the tournament would help. Say, know any rich alumni?
Great expectations for freshmen four

By Lisa Coston
Staff Writer

The 1987-88 Wolfpack freshman class is rated by many experts to be among the best in the country, and the four players enter Coach Jim Valvano’s program with impressive credentials and high expectations.

Valvano describes the four players—Chris Corchiani, Sean Green, Rodney Monroe and Byron Tucker—as “a very mature, very talented, very nice group of kids who have had a very good preseason.

He says that although early speculation is risky, he expects all four—including Tucker, who has decided to sit out a year—to develop into eventual starters.

Tucker, a 6-9 forward from Oxon Hill, Md., made the personal decision to become Valvano’s first-ever redshirt player. The coach explains that Tucker will be able to “concentrate on his books and his body” and get better settled into the college environment.

Assistant Coach Dick Stewart concurs. “Byron Tucker will be contributing to the team by building up his strength, learning the system, and being an inspiration to his teammates.”

Nominated as an All-American by Street and Smith’s and USA Today, Tucker averaged 13.9 points, 11.7 rebounds and 1.8 blocks per game as a senior while leading Potomac High School to a 20-3 record. Described by Valvano as an excellent shooter, he hit 44 percent from the field and 67 percent from the line, while scoring in double figures in every game his final year. As a junior, he averaged 21.9 points and 9.8 rebounds playing the guard position.

The Washington Post named him suburban Washington, D.C. Player of the Year, and he played in the McDonald’s Capital Classic. All Star Games ranked him fifth on their list of the nation’s top 500 preps, and many analysts have compared Tucker favorably to former Wolfpack forward Thurl Bailey.

Chris Corchiani is considered one of the best pure point guards in the country, and Valvano comments that he “always thinks pass” on the court, and is “always thinking about the game and running the show,” descriptions which may evoke memories of former Wolfpack point guard Sidney Lowe.

Because of the team’s depth, it is not important for Corchiani to start this year. But he will definitely see playing time according to Valvano.

Corchiani, at 6-0, 180 lbs., is the all-time scoring and assist leader in Florida high school basketball history, with 3,415 points and 1,497 assists. He is the only player ever named the state’s Mr. Basketball twice.

Playing for a 31-5 Hialeah-Miami Lakes team, he averaged 24.3 points, 13.1 assists, 4.5 steals and 4.4 rebounds a game while shooting 60 percent from the field and 85 percent from the line. He scored in double digits in all 36 games with a 42-point high, and had 15 games in which he also totaled double-digit assists. His statistics were nearly identical his junior year, when his team won the Florida 4A title with a 35-4 record.

Listed among Street and Smith’s Top 20 prep stars, Corchiani played in the McDonald’s All-Star Classic and the Dapper Dan Roundball Classic. He became the first high school player in Dade County to have his jersey retired.

Joining Corchiani in what Valvano likes to call his “backcourt of the future” is 6-3 Rodney Monroe, a Parade Magazine and USA Today first-team all-America from Hagerstown, Md., at the sec. and guard spot.

Freshman Rodney Monroe (21) tries to move in on freshman Sean Green during State’s intra-squad scrimmage.

This two-time state prep Player of the Year became Maryland’s all-time leading scorer with 1,047 points, breaking the previous record of 2,844 set by the NBA’s Quintin Dailey during his high school career. As a senior, Monroe averaged 27.3 points, 10 rebounds, 3.5 assists and 3.4 steals a game.

Connecting on 52.5 percent of his field goal tries and 86 percent of his free throws, he led St. Maria Goretti High School to a 35-5 record and a second straight Baltimore city championship. He hit a 60-foot shot at the buzzer in the title game to down undefeated Lake Clifton 73-72.

Monroe scored at least 16 points in each of his 40 senior games, and had 47 in the championship game. Over four years as a starter, he averaged 27.2 points per game.

As the Most Valuable Player of the Raleigh Times Tip-Off Classic last year, Monroe set the scoring records both for a single game (45) and for the 3-game series (107). He was also the MVP at last summer's Five Star Camp.

According to Valvano, Monroe is an excellent shooter who "can really fill it up. Although he had a slow pre-season start he is improving every day.

"He is one of those players who you know will just get better and better each year," Valvano said. "His senior year will be his best."

"I think I'll be able to shoot the 3-pointer well. I hope to see a lot of playing time this year," Monroe said.

He says he is very excited about the coming season and will be interested to see how the team progresses early.

Rounding out the group is 6-6 forward Sean Green, whom Valvano describes as the best athlete of the group, a "very exciting player" possessing outstanding quickness and leaping ability.

He is known as a 'slasher,' a player capable of driving to the basket and creating shots.

Green won all-tournament honors last season in the prestigious Las Vegas Holiday Prep Classic, the Sonny Hill Philadelphia Invitational, and the Ashland Holiday Classic. Nicknamed "Buse" by virtue of his 40-inch-plus vertical jump, he won the slam dunk contest at the Dapper Dan Roundball Classic by leaping over a teammate seated in a chair for a resounding dunk.

The Long Island, N.Y. native spent his senior season at Oak Hill Academy, where he shot 51.4 percent from the field and 69.2 percent from the foul line on the way to a 17.3 points per game average. He also averaged 6.4 rebounds a contest.

Green's team went 25-1 on the year and was ranked fourth in USA Today's final prep poll.

Green played three seasons at August Martin High School in Jamaica, N.Y., where he earned all-city and all-metro honors as a junior.

He was one of ten players chosen for the U.S. Junior team which participated in the Albert Schweitzer games in West Germany last summer. He started in six of the gold medal winning team's seven victories, averaging over 15 points a game.

Green says that this season he hopes to "contribute to the team the best I can."

"Whatever I'm asked to do to help the team win the ACC championship again I'll do it.

Valvano says that in addition to their many strengths, the four players share many of the weaknesses common to freshmen. He says they 'need to work much harder at defense' and to develop the game judgment which he considers so important.

Both of their goals should be realized with playing time and experience. Adjusting from high school, where they were probably used to being the best player and the center of attention, to a college environment where they are among so many talented players, is difficult for all freshmen, he adds.

They are all getting better each day as they become familiar with our system, their teammates, and with what we are trying to do," Valvano said.

This group of kids is a real pleasure to work with — their effort is consistent and they work hard at practice. They will certainly all contribute this year... and they are our team of the future."
Four new women for Wolfpack

This year's Wolfpack women's basketball team features four new members, but only two of them are freshmen.

"This team won't look anything like last year's team," coach Kay Yow said. "Our biggest problem will be experience, so we'll need a number of young players to come through for us."

Nicole Lehmann, a 5-5 freshman guard, was named an honorable mention all-America after her senior season. Lehmann led both teams in the annual Red-White game, scoring 25 points. She averaged 20.9 points, seven assists and 3.5 steals per game as a high school senior.

"Nicole Lehmann is probably the most fundamentally sound player we've ever recruited," Yow said. "As far as fundamentals—passing, ballhandling, shooting, and positioning—she knows the game."

State's other freshman, 6-3 center Sharon Manning, was a third-team Parade all-America and was selected as one of USA Today's top 15 prep players in the nation. Manning averaged 31 points, 19 rebounds and four blocked shots a game in her senior season and was twice named Virginia 2-A Player of the Year.

"We're hoping for big things out of Sharon," Yow said. "She is mobile with a lot of potential."

Sophomore Gerri Robuck, who joined the team this summer after not joining the team her first year at State, earned both all-state and academic all-America honors in high school. She averaged 20 points, eight rebounds and five assists at Raleigh's Ravenscroft High School.

Robuck is expected to make an immediate impact at guard this season.

"Gerri is just icing on the cake," Yow said. "She's very intelligent with the ability to become a solid collegiate player."

Junior forward Toni Hughes is only the Wolfpack's second walk-on candidate to ever make the team. (Junior Sandi Osborne was the first.)

Hughes played at Peace College for two years before joining the Wolfpack.

Game plan.

Success in basketball requires plenty of training, good coaching and team play. And it requires a game plan.

At McDonald's, our game plan is simple. We have the team to produce winners every season. Winners like Quarter Pounders Sandwiches (weight before cooking 4 oz., or 113.4 gm.), Big Mac, Sandwiches, Golden French Fries, and Thick Shakes.

And our game plan includes careful handling. We never drop the ball when it comes to service. Prompt and courteous — whether you’re home team or visitor.

So, before or after the next battle on the hardwood, include McDonald’s in your game plan.
