Cadets To Perform

It was announced today that the Air Force Marching Cadets will lead the Air Force ROTC wing in the Land Grant Convocation celebrations at the State Fair on Monday, October 16th.

The exhibit presented a description of the activities of the various schools, as well as a general description of the activities of the college, such as ROTC, the library, and the band. The display also takes note of State College's 75th anniversary as a land-grant college.

State Student Is World Traveler

Smedley P. Fleedlattam, who has visited many of the wonders of the ancient world, is shown here viewing the ruins of an Aztec temple recently excavated, actually the D. H. Hill Library. This remarkably large and strangely laid-out edifice had at one time housed about 200,000 clay tablets, many of which, when found, were in such good condition that they appeared to be unused. Some of the others, unfortunately, have been marred by odd scribbling. This was thought to have been done by a later tribe with a lower level of culture. It is thought that some sudden catastrophe buried this building, for many bodies were found, having been preserved through the centuries, still relaxing in the chairs, almost as if they were only asleep. # State Fair To Honor College Convocation Slated Monday

The North Carolina State Fair will honor State College and other Land-Grant colleges Monday. Classes will be dismissed at 12:00 noon.

State College will be recognized by the 94th annual State Fair for its rise as one of the nation's top Land-Grant colleges and its 75-year history of achievements. The fair will be in Raleigh the week of October 16-21. More than 750,000 people are expected to attend.

State Agricultural Commissioner L. Y. Ballentine, who is directing the 1961 State Fair, said that the exhibits will be centered around two of State College's anniversaries — the Diamond Jubilee and the Land-Grant College Centennial.

On Monday at 3:30 p.m. a special feature of the day-long program will be an educational convocation in the State Fair Arena. Chancellor John T. Caldwell will preside. Others participating will be Governor Terry Sanford, Commissioner Ballentine, President William C. Friday of the Consolidated University of North Carolina, and Dr. Frank P. Graham, a special mediator of the United Nations and former president of the Consolidated University.

Special music will be presented by State College's 85-man Symphonic Band and the 100-voice Men's Glee Club directed by J. Perry Watson.

The college's 3000 Army and Air Force cadets will participate in a military procession.

Marching in an academic procession will be 700 faculty members of State College. All staff members will be excused from their duties at 2 p.m. in order that they may attend the exercises.

Chancellor Caldwell has stated that "All students should plan to attend the program. It will be of great interest to everyone."

Each of the college's nine schools will have displays in the State Fair's giant exposition halls. The central exhibits will be located in the Arena.

John Hertzman, designer of the exhibits and member of the college's School of Design faculty, commented that "Each citizen seeing the exhibits will get a realistic idea of what State College is, what training it provides, the kind of research it does, and how this research affects him." The Land-Grant college philosophy and concepts will be included throughout the exhibits.

Campus Thefts Continue

The rash of textbook thefts evident on campus last year has threatened to continue this fall. In its first case of the semester, the Honor Code Board found a State student guilty of stealing a freshman graphics book.

John Carr, a member of the board which tried the case, stated that the trial revealed that the student had found the book in a classroom and had taken it with the intention of turning it in to the lost and found department. However, he later took the text to the Students Supply Store and attempted to sell it. The Board felt that his intent to turn the book in was good; but when he tried to sell the book, he plainly violated the Honor Code.

ber of any student activity except those in which he may be a life member. In addition, a record of the verdict will be placed in the student's permanent record.

The Honor Code Board considered a multitude of similar cases last spring. "The Board wishes to remind the student body that every lost or mislaid book belongs to someone," reported Board member John Curlee, "and that selling a book that one has found is defined as deliberate stealing under the Honor Code."

The student was placed on probation for the school year 1961-62, which means that he may in no way represent the student body or remain a mem-

Little Theatre To Perform

Three members of the Raleigh Little Theatre are shown as they prepare for their forthcoming production, "The Pleasure of His Company."

Shown above are Chuck Billings, Pat Umenhofer, and Helen Crisp. The play will be held at Raleigh Little Theater Oct. 13-21. Students may obtain free tickets and date tickets tonight and Sunday afternoon by presenting his ID card at the College Union main desk.

ROTC To Hold Parade At Centennial Ceremony

The North Carolina State College Army-Air Force ROTC Cadets Corps will participate in a review and the Land-Grant Centennial Ceremony at the State Fair Grounds on Monday, October 16.

The separate units of the Army and the Air Force will assemble at 12:50 p.m. and will depart at 1:00 o'clock.

The combined units will begin their march at the intersection of Dan Allen Drive and the Married Student Housing Road and will proceed on a prescribed route to the State Fair Grounds.

At 2:30 the mass formation will pass in review and proceed into the State Fair Arena.

The indoor ceremonies will begin at 3:30. The program will consist of a demonstration by the Pershing Rifle Drill Platoon, the Marching Airman Drill Platoon, and the Joint Army-Air Force Color Guard. There will also be a Land-Grant Centennial and Diamond Anniversary of State College program conducted under the direction of Chancellor John T. Caldwell. Upon completion of the program, the cadets will be dismissed.

Seventeen Aggies Tapped As Alpha Zeta Pledges

The men with straw hats and coveralls who have been seen strolling around campus this week aren't as out of place as they may seem. In reality they are not visiting plowboys or freshmen who haven't quite learned the ropes as far as dress is concerned.

As the big signs proudly worn by the men in blue jeans clearly indicate, the seventeen persons in question are pledges of Alpha Zeta, the national honorary agricultural fraternity which is holding its initiation activities this week.

Alpha Zeta is known chiefly to State College students through the Book Exchange it maintains at the beginning and end of each semester. This project sponsors a small scholarship for a deserving student each year.

"The main objective of Alpha Zeta is to promote the profession of agriculture through student, alumni, associate, and honorary members," stated Ervin Lineberger, Chancellor of Alpha Zeta. "Our pledges are chosen on the basis of high scholarship, outstanding character, leadership, and personality."

The organization, which had

Credit Where Credit Due

Education once was restricted to those people who were privileged by birth and wealth, but now the trend has changed and the exclusiveness is gone.

One of the main reasons for this change in the emphasis of education was the Morrell Act which provided the money for the land grant colleges and was passed a hundred years ago.

Throughout the nation, the land grant colleges are celebrating their centennial, and the festivities for State College will begin this Monday.

Along with the celebration of the passing of the Morrell Act, this year also has another significance to our college, for its seventy-fifth anniversary will be commemorated in February.

Land grant colleges mean much to our nation and we are proud to be a part of the system. Although these colleges number less than four per cent of the nation's institutions of higher learning, they enroll about twenty per cent of the nation's students and grant nearly forty per cent of the nation's doctoral degrees.

These colleges probably mean more to our nation in these times than any other type of college or university. With the threat of communism in all parts of the world and the great emphasis which our nation is placing on scientific achievement to combat this communistic threat, our land grant colleges are providing most of the scientifically trained persons who can help America in its quest for scientific superiority. Land grant colleges also carry on a large portion of the scientific research of our nation.

An aspect of land grant colleges which is as important as their scientific contributions is the fact that they have offered education to individuals who might not have attended colleges in earlier times. These colleges are usually inexpensive and offer courses which appeal to a large segment of our population. The exclusiveness in college and the unrealistic programs of universities in pre-Civil War America have been altered by the land grant colleges. They began offering positive programs which were geared for the future and the other colleges had to follow their lead. Their outlook towards progress was so realistic that they started a trend which is now culminating in an educational system which looks to the future instead of the past.

When State College is honored for its seventy-five years of existence and the land grant colleges are recognized for their impact on the educational system of our country Monday, we feel that credit will be placed where credit is due. The many services which our country has received from land grant colleges in their hundred years of existence have also been granted to our part of the nation by State College.

Watkins, Gerald Jon
"Oh dear me, and oh dear you. If it wasn't for me what would I do?"

This past Saturday we had occasion to strike up a conversation with a little girl out where we were surveying some lots. She was blonde-headed, cute, 3 or 4 years old, and of course, innocent looking. She volunteered her name and in the same breath stated, "I'm going to get a baby sister tomorrow, but she's in my Mommy's stomach right now. The doctor won't let me go to the hospital with her but I'll see her when she gets home."

Somewhat taken aback with the sudden knowledge of the intimacies of her home life we went off wondering what ever happened to the "stork story."

"The hurrier I go, the behinder I get."

In an editorial in the News and Observer the other day the story was told of a Rusk-Gromyko meeting. It was a luncheon, and as the two sat down a package of Russian cigarettes was discovered on the table. Suddenly laughter was heard coming from the two officials. Had someone said, "Are you vetoing more and enjoying it less?"

"Nowhere to fall but off, Nowhere to stand but on."
Judged by the Company one Keeps
One night in early October,

Returning with my head with many pride,
My feet began to stutter,
So I lay down in the gutter,
And a pig came near, and lay down by my side;

"You can tell a man who boozes, By the company he chooses,"
And the pig got up and slowly walked away.

Editors note:

The writer of the weekly column "Crit" feels that many times points which should be made, have been well-covered in the past, and at times he will draw from the files of The Technician columns written by students of earlier years. This week he is submitting another article which originally appeared under the byline of John Cooke in 1959.

I had just finished my drink and was standing up and feeling in my pocket for a cigarette. We were over at Julie's apartment having a session, and somebody had written a poem about an old beat-up horse and was reading it to us, but I didn't like it. It didn't move me much, so my standing up and hunting for a weed was a gesture of protest at the boredom of it all. It was sort of an understanding among us that if somebody became bored with anything he would express himself silently by standing up and pulling out a cigarette.

Everybody saw me and knew what I was thinking, and the guy who was reading the poem (I forget his name) stopped and said, "What's wrong, man? Am I boring you?"

"Yes," I said.
"What's wrong with it?" he asked.

"I don't know. It just doesn't have it." He was sitting cross-legged on the floor and I stepped around him and padded over to the window. The floor squeaked harshly and grated on my nerves. It sounded like somebody was killing a pig downstairs. The window was dirty, and the screen was out too, and it was foggy as hell outside in the street. The neon signs were flashing on and off all over the place and seemed to be like something out of an opium dream. It was frightening.

It was really frightening, so I spun around and looked over the room and all the dirty, stupid people in it. Some of them liked his goddam little poem and even were drags enough to say so.

"Come on," said Julie. "What's the bitch? I think it's pretty expressive."

Pretty expressive. Sure it was. You bet. That was worse than anything in the poem and was pretty unexpressive.

I turned away and glanced out the window again. It was still dirty. I wanted to kick it out, but somehow managed to repress the idea. Impulses like that are really frightening sometimes.

Finally I told them what I thought. I said, "Man, it doesn't say anything new. Like's it's a repetition. It's the same old stuff that reminds me of cold left-over bacon, or something."

Julie put her bra back on and stood up, gesturing with a beer can. "Listen," she said. "I admit the message has been said before, but Neil has really expressed it well. I mean it's a worthwhile message."

This killed me. I could have walked out right there.

Suddenly there was a knock on the door. Julie started to pull her bra off again, but this guy who was nuts about her caught her hand and she couldn't do it. "Quick," he said. "Put this around you." He picked up his sport coat and handed it to her. "Go to hell," she said.

"Come on," he said. "It might be the cops." He was really a fool.

Finally one of the other girls got up and went over to the door. She opened it and this mousey-looking character in a golf hat stuck his head into the room. "May I come in? I'm a writer . . ."

"Oh God," I said. "Like this makes me want to weep." He pushed on in and stared at us through his stupid-looking, pansy, horn-rimmed glasses.

"I'm going to write a novel." Nobody said a word. Nobody even moved. He looked like he'd just swallowed a rotten grapefruit. I scooped up a beer can and tossed it at him, and it hit him on the knee and clattered to the floor among the cigarette butts.

He just stood there, trembling all over. Then he spun around and made a dash for the door and ran on out into the hallway. I rushed out after him and chased him to the stairwell. "Fool!" I screamed as he stumbled down the stairs. "Fool!"

For it's zen, zen, zen, that makes you have the yen!

Frosh Gridders Try To Extend Streak

Coach Johnny Clements' freshman team will be seeking its second win of the season when it meets the University of South Carolina freshmen in Columbia, S. C., Friday night.

In the Wolflets only other game this year they defeated the UNC freshmen 7-6.

South Carolina's freshmen have one win and one loss to their credit. In their last outing, they defeated the Citadel freshmen, 21-6.

The South Carolina frosh are supposed to have a fine quarterback and some exceptionally fine runners.

Clements has no special plans for the game, but he is expected to use much the same tactics that he did against UNC.

Shelby Mansfield, Wolflet halfback, is expected to be the main offensive threat. Against Carolina, Mansfield gained 52 yards in nine carries. QB Ray Barlow picked up 44 yards rushing in five carries against UNC for an 8.8 average.

Others in the backfield with Barlow and Mansfield should be HB Mike Malone and FB Gibbons Sloan. Sloan scored the touchdown against Carolina and Malone kicked the game-winning extra point.

Rounding out the starting team should be ends, Bill Hall and Jim Earwood; tackles, John Irvin and Bob Cooch; guards, Bennett Williams, and Bruzz Perrou and at center, Sam Saunders.

The Wolflets will be trying to extend a winning streak of seven games over a period of two years.

Freshman halfback Shelby Mansfield who is expected to be the main offensive threat of the Wolflets this year.

many a knight was spent in rusty armor

In days of yore, men feared not only their mortal enemies, but the elements too. It was the medieval armorer's task to protect his chief against foemen, but weather-protection was a more difficult matter. Thus many a knight was spent in rusty armor.

Engineers and scientists at Ford Motor Company, engaged in both pure and applied research, are coping even today with the problem of body protection (car bodies, that is). Through greater understanding of the chemistry of surfaces, they have developed new paint primers and undercoatings, new rustproofing methods, and special sealers that guard entire car bodies against nature's corrosive forces—all of which add armor-like protection to Ford-built cars.

From other scientific inquiries will undoubtedly come new materials with protective properties vastly superior to those of today. This is another example of Ford's leadership through scientific research and engineering.
