State Vs. Duke Sold Out, May Also Be Televised

By BILL FISHBURNE

N. C. State Athletic Director Roy Clogston announced last night that he was "very optimistic" that the Duke-State basketball game in Reynolds Coliseum tonight would be televised.

The game has been a complete sellout in town since last week, and the 5,628 seats allotted for students were filled by Monday night. Only 900 of these tickets were for dates.

Clogston pointed out that 628 more seats were reserved for students at the game than have been reserved for any game since 1959.

When the lack of student tickets became apparent Tuesday, the Athletic Department attempted to have WUNC-TV televise the game. This was not possible, however, since the WUNC equipment is set up in the State House to televise the opening of the State Legislature today at noon. George Hall, director of the station at State, said the equipment could not be moved to the Coliseum in time to televise the game.

Chancellor Caldwell issued the following statement Tuesday night: "Mr. Clogston and I are distressed that the estimate of the student demand for tickets for the Duke game falls short of student requirements. The athletic ticket office reserved 500 more for students than for any game since 1959. Everybody loves a winner!

"Maximum additional seats (128) have been moved into the Coliseum for the students. Beyond that, there is no way to increase the Coliseum capacity. We hope television may be possible. We apologize to you who are deprived of the opportunity to see this game and we beg your acceptance of a situation we cannot now remedy."

Game Tonight May Decide Season Championship

North Carolina State, a co-owner of first place in the ACC and owners of an 11 game winning streak, will seek to take sole position of the number one spot and extend its victorious streak to 12 games when the Duke Blue Devils invade the Coliseum tonight.

The meeting of these two teams has generated as much tension and suspense as any title game in the ACC Tournament ever has. Another thing close to the hearts of Wolfpack followers is the string of six consecutive losses to Duke in two years.

The contest matches the ACC's leading offensive team against the leading defensive unit. Duke with a 95.3 scoring average not only holds first place in the ACC but has nailed down second place in scoring in the nation. State's 64.9 point allowance to the opposition is suspended list following the mid-year exams.

Included in this group was basketball team captain Larry Lakins, who failed to make the required 1.9 average. The number of students suspended is higher than last year's figure but this has been attributed to the larger enrollment, according to Dean of Student Affairs J. J. Stewart.

Some of the students still have a chance for readmission by appeal to the Faculty Commission on Admission, set up to "consider special cases with extenuating circumstances."

Lakins won readmission by appeal on the basis of hardship. The star basketball player has had a recurring problem in the fact that his wife has been in the hospital suffering from asthma, according to basketball Coach Press Maravich. The readmission followed letters of appeal to the admission committee from Lakins, Maravich, and Athletic Director Roy Clogston.

"You can imagine what something like getting back in does for my wife and me," Lakins said. Lakins is now on provisional status which does not affect his basketball eligibility.

College officials stated that Lakins' case was one "of about 10" receiving favorable action from the six-man admissions committee which has processed about 20 cases.

Honor Code Board Tries Three

Two students in Recreation and Park Administration who were surprised by a professor, Charles C. Stott, in the act of stealing exam papers after breaking into the field house during exam week, were tried by the Honor Code Board last night.

A verdict had not been reached at press time. In another trial last night, the board convicted a student of cheating on a test. He was suspended from school for one semester and summer school.

Stott, an assistant professor in RPA, said he did not feel it was his place to comment on the matter because he had immediately turned the matter over to the Department head, who then called in the Department of Student Activities.

Legislature To Consider N.C. State Name Change

A bill to change the name of N. C. State of the University of North Carolina at Raleigh to N. C. State University is expected to be one of the first items of consideration before the North Carolina Legislature which convenes at noon today at the State House.

Agitation is also underway for a re-alignment of trustee membership to give State alumni more membership on the board which is presently dominated by Carolina graduates.

The controversial name change is expected to have considerable strength in the House of Representatives but less strength in the Senate.

Lt. Gov. Robert Scott, a State graduate who will head the Senate, has taken no position on the name change.

However, Scott expressed interest in the trustee representation. "It would be more beneficial if State could have more representatives on the board," he said. "This would be more far reaching than the name might be."

Scott also expressed concern about the $54 million budget State is requesting from the legislature and predicted that a capital improvements bond issue might be presented. If such a proposal arises, he pointed out, it would be up to the governor to decide what would happen. The state already has approved a school bond issue and a road bond issue is also expected to be presented.

The Speaker Ban Law, which Scott defined as a "hastily enacted bill which has put a burden upon university people trying to bring in lecturers," may be amended, he said.

"But I don't think it will be repealed," Scott continued. "I can't think of a single senator who would introduce a repeal."

Open Rush Is Started By Fraternities Today

The spring semester of "rush" begins today for State's 17 fraternities.

Official rush will continue through Sunday. However, since spring is an open rush there are no firm rules covering the actual hours which any fraternity must observe. Each fraternity is left to its own discretion as to what hours it will observe and what activities it will offer.

In addition to the well-known fraternity row, which houses 12 of the fraternities, there are five situated throughout Raleigh. Three of the five fraternities are located at 1508, 1718, and 2304 Hillsboro Street. One is located at 2513 Clark Avenue and the last, Delta Sigma Phi, is located on Tyrone Road outside Raleigh. Since the Delta Sig's are outside walking distance, any rushee may obtain a ride by placing a phone call to them.

Most fraternities are planning combo parties for Friday and Saturday nights with dates for rushees. Good combo groups are the order of the day such as "The Fabulous Five," which will play at the Theta Chi house Saturday night and the Sigma Nu house Sunday.

Interview Schedule Released For State

Editor's note: As a service to the student body, "The Technician" will carry this column entitled "Interview Schedule" in future issues listing the companies to be on campus interviewing seniors. Students are required to sign up two weeks before a company is to visit the campus. Sign-up sheets are available in room 239 Riddick on the day sign-ups are due. This column will list companies to sign up for on any particular day and the curricula each hires. Special placement notices will also appear in the column. Employers to sign up for on Thursday, February 4 (on campus Feb. 18)

Aeronautical Systems Division—EE, EM, ME, MEA, PY. American Brake Shoe Company—EE, IE, ME, MTE.

Day Of Awakeing

A day of great awakening begins today—the day when the North Carolina General Assembly convenes. This is a day that many look forward to and others dread, both for the very same reason, for this is the time when the legislators begin living up to or living down their many campaign promises. It's a time when talk must be turned into action and decisions must be made.

High on the list of the numerous decisions that the state's governing body must face are the issues dealing with education. For State students, this invariably means three things: how much money will be appropriated for educational purposes, whether the name of this institution will be changed again, and whether any changes will be made in the Speaker Ban Law.

Budget requests from the state's 15 tax-supported institutions of higher learning are greater than ever and it will be up to the legislators to determine where the money will go. N. C. State's budget requests alone total more than $54 million for the biennium 1965-67.

The legislators inevitably will be seeking means of stretching the dollar as far as possible in all phases of their legislation. However, the field of education is a touchy subject. President Johnson has talked a lot about the Great Society. And in doing so, he has stressed the value of an educated people as a basis for achieving his hopes for the status of the American people. It is no secret—the dollars spent for education are necessary. The legislature will have a difficult time justifying any corners it may decide to cut.

The name of this institution is also an extremely touchy subject. Just the mere mention of it is likely to raise the ire of legislators who have no desire to spend their time arguing about emotions, particularly when other matters are of much greater importance. The name of N. C. State of the University of North Carolina at Raleigh is awkward and even more clumsy than the name the institution previously had—North Carolina State College of Agriculture and Engineering of the University of North Carolina.

Should the legislature choose to change the name to North Carolina State University or the University of North Carolina at Raleigh, they should do it without bickering. By now they should know how the citizens of this state feel about the name and when and if the time comes for making a decision on the name, they should be capable of doing an intelligent job. The institution now has the status of a university, regardless of its name. The only things connected with the name are sentiment and tradition, not the quality of the institution.

It is the strong opinion of this paper that the legislature should repeal the Speaker Ban Law. The law, which was hurriedly rammed through the 1963 legislature, has done nothing to improve the intellectual atmosphere at this institution. Instead, it is an obstacle in the realm of academic freedom.

The law is both unnecessary and vague. It specifies that no Communist may speak on the campus of a state-supported institution. This excludes scientists who may have much more to contribute to the education of students than they will ever take away. This stifles rather than encourages the incentive of students to learn outside the classroom.

The day of awakening is here and the legislature will decide in the next few months just how much awakening this state can take.

CONTENTION

To the Editor:

In a recent issue of The Daily Tar Heel appeared an article that captured my attention. In my opinion, every good citizen would be interested in it. I feel that it is our duty, mine and yours, to make this article available to our fellow students. The article's title is "Hands that Feed Should Be Bitten." It is written by Art Buchwald (a syndicated columnist) and it goes as follows:

Last week was known as "Tell the United States to Jump in the Lake Week." Between Gen. Khanh in Viet Nam, the African nations in the UN, and our good and dear friend Nasser in the United Arab Republic, everyone seemed to be giving us the business and there wasn't much we could do about it.

Nobody seems to be impressed with the power and influence of the United States these days.

Just the other day the Prime Minister of the newly-formed country of Didiandia paid a visit to the American embassy to ask the American ambassador for aid.

"Mr. Ambassador," he said, "our country is in dire straits. Our agricultural crops have failed, our textile industry is bankrupt, and our five-year housing plan has collapsed. We need American help immediately."

"Then why are your people breaking all the windows in my embassy?" the ambassador asked.

"I must warn you, Mr. Ambassador, we will not accept any aid that has strings attached. Our country has its pride."

"I'm not asking for strings," the ambassador replied. "I'm asking you to stop breaking my windows."

"My government will not permit your government to tell us how to run our internal affairs."

"Mr. Prime Minister, why did you burn down the USIA library?"

"I will not sit here and listen to these colonist attacks against my country. We are a free nation and we can burn down any library we feel like."

The American ambassador ducked as a rock came flying through the window. "Another thing, Mr. Prime Minister, my country would like to know why your country shot down three unarmed American airplanes?"

"And what about the Negroes in the South?" the Prime Minister said.

The American ambassador clutched his desk as a bomb went off in the embassy basement.

"It's going to be hard for me to justify American aid in your country when you keep doing things that offend our country."

"Be more specific, Mr. Ambassador."

"Well, for example, I thought making me eat an American Flag at your independence day celebration was a bit too much."

"We made the Russian ambassador eat a flag also and he didn't complain."

"That's because you tipped him off and he had one made of rice paper."

"I didn't come here to discuss trivial matters. I came to ask for agricultural items, a couple of hydroelectric dams, and three squadrons of jet bombers. I feel that's the least you can do for a new nation that is struggling to join the family of peace-loving nations."

"What about those American missionaries you're holding as hostages?"

"What about the 800 students you arrested at the University of California?"

Suddenly from outside came the sound of machine-gun fire.

"What's that?" the ambassador asked.

"It's a coup d'etat. I warned you if you didn't give me aid my government would fall. Now you'll be dealing with an unfriendly regime and you have only yourself to blame."

In my opinion, this article gives an example of where and how our foreign aid money is spent. Let our common sense be the judge of this article.

SUGGESTIONS FOR SLATER

To the Editor:

Many complaints are heard every day concerning the food service on campus. The Slater Food Service takes a brutal verbal beating which it does not completely deserve. Most of the fault of the poor food service on campus lies with the individual cafeterias. Therefore, I believe that simple, old-fashioned suggestion boxes should be added to serve the dual purpose of providing an outlet for student complaints and providing constructive criticism for the various cafeterias. Of course, there are those who always take advantage of suggestion boxes with unnecessary remarks, and also those cafeteria managers who will not accept constructive criticism, but if the students and cafeteria managers truly want to improve the campus food service situation then the addition of suggestion boxes is a step in the right direction.

SLUMP

By Jim Robinson

Trying to think of a name for a column with a news editor who likes to harrass overharrassed writers hanging over one's head is an experience to upset even the most hardened Technician goof-off.

Twenty minutes before deadline I had 10 column names in the hat I left on top of my typewriter for suggestions.

The first one read "LBJ for UNC" and was signed by the Dean of the Chapel Hill Liberal Arts School. I threw it out before anyone saw it. After that things only got worse. Fishburne had put in two, "Sewerpipes" and "Steampack." Bob Holmes had dropped in "SG Awed Me" and "ROTC and Morals at N. C. State." Others were "Beauty and the Beasts—Coed Life," (Myrna Glotz, 4th floor Watauga), "Wolftracks" (Cheerleader—Name Withheld), "Snow Coolin'" (A Times Reporter), "Fang!" (4th year design class), and lastly "N.C.S. of U.N.C. at R. Chatter-box" (Anonymous).

By 20 minutes after deadline, I had weeded out all but two—"Sewerpipes" and "Steampack." Fishburne was talking about getting me a raise.

Now I had two column names and no column. There was no time to go through the hat routine again. At 7:30, two hours and a half after deadline I called my roommate to see if he had any ideas. He suggested I call someone else and take care of my own xxxx column.

Fishburne called from the print shop, screaming, at 9. I explained my problem and told him I had decided to call the thing either "Sewerpack" or "Packpipes." I was told to have the column in by 9:30 or I wouldn't have to worry about it. He suggested I write "The Lakins Story." I hung up. The editor phoned at 9:15 to ask if I wanted some sandwiches and would I like to write on "Larry Lakins and the General Assembly." Sandwiches, yes; Larry, no, I said.

With the column about half finished I took a break to sign for a telegram from Fishburne asking me if I still had my typewriter and did I know the print shop closes at midnight. Things looked pretty grim. Unless I could get the cartoonist to draw a long, thin, one-column cartoon, there was no way to fill the paper. The cartoonist, it turned out, was getting drunk on his paycheck. No chance for a cartoon by midnight.

I called the CU thinking I could get a press release and send Fishburne a news story instead of a column. I was so groggy that when the operator answered I asked for Larry Lakins. She told me she couldn't give out any information to anybody and that if I wanted to I could call the Chancellor. I thanked her and called the editor for more sandwiches.

In desperation I started thumbing through back issues of the paper to see whether there was anything I could send the print shop that might not be recognized. Halfway through last year's copies I came across an article by Fishburne about jumping out of planes. I tore it out, scribbled "Lakinspipes" across the head of it, and sent it to Fishburne. Half an hour later he called back and congratulated me on the fine job.

So this first column isn't really my fault, entirely.

Rubenstein: Great Keyboard Artist

By BILLI DARDEN

Artur Rubenstein, one of the great keyboard artists of today, was presented Monday and Tuesday nights for the sixth Friends of the College concert of the series.

The opening number was provided by the only Beethoven selection of the evening. "Sonata in E flat Major, Opus 31, No. 3" was presented with charm and gaiety. The movements of the piece seemed to counterbalance each other as the emotion-filled Allegro was followed by a jocular second theme. Then the Scherzo presented a serious march tune and contradicting staccato basses and sforzato accents. A Menuetto followed before the final movement. The Presto con fuoco abounded with merriment under the skilled hands of Rubenstein.

Four Chopin numbers were the next section of the pianist's program. The first of these was "Ballade in G minor, Opus 23." This was followed by two playful Etudes which are studies of technique. A more serene number, Chopin's "Nocturne in F sharp Major, Opus 15," showed the poetic beauty common to the works of the composer. The last number before the intermission, the popular "Polonaise in A flat Major, Opus 53," showed the vigor of the pianist.

After the intermission, the four Debussy selections and "Hungarian Rhapsody No. 12" by Liszt won Rubenstein a standing ovation from the audience. The Debussy numbers were "Prelude in A Minor," "Homage to Rameau," "Ondine," and "La plus que lente." Another Liszt selection was "Valse Oubliee."

As an encore, Rubenstein performed "Polichinelle" by Villa-Lobos, a South American composer.

The Student: More Than A Number

By ARTHUR DUMONT

"When educators come to think of students as IBM numbers, learning machines, or robots, then they have failed in the very essence of their work," says Coach Maravich, head of Wolfpack basketball. "If you take the human being out of education you leave a vacuum of hollow ideas and society is none the better for it.

"It is impractical to attempt to measure the worth of the human heart by quality points. Every person is made up differently and it is absurd to think that the entire future of anyone should be dependent upon something as abstract as a quality point," Maravich continued.

These comments were in answer to the query by this reporter concerning the mid-semester confusion over the scholastic eligibility of Larry Lakins.

"An athlete should be considered as a student first and an athlete second. The mistake many people make is believing that education is something to be derived only from text-books. Nothing could be further from the truth," added Maravich.

"Education is the spiritual, mental, physical and social attitudes created in the environment of a school like State, in which young people can develop their skills and abilities into more productive uses for society and themselves," Maravich said definitively.

Just then Coach Everett Case entered the conversation adding, "It is this type of thing, referring to the abstract application of quality points, that causes so many students to 'fudge' on tests and examinations. In an environment where grades reign supreme instead of the individual human being, this must be expected. The recent goings on at the Air Force Academy serve to illustrate this point."

ONCE MORE UNTO THE BREACH

Today I begin my eleventh year of writing this column in your campus newspaper.

I wasn't sure I'd be coming back this year. After a decade of doing this column, I had retreated to my country seat, tired but happy, to enjoy a nice long rest. But last night as I sat on my verandah, peaceful and serene, humming the largo from A Long Day's Night and warming my dog, a stranger suddenly appeared before me.

He was a tall, clean-limbed man, crinkly-eyed and crooked-grinned, stalwart and virile. "How do you do," he said. "My name is Stalwart Virile and I am with the Personna Stainless Steel Razor Blade people."

"Enchanted," I said. "Take off your homburg and sit down." I clapped my hands sharply. "Norman!" I called. "Another chair for Mr. Virile!"

"Another chair for Mr. Virile!"

"Obediently my dog trotted away and returned directly with a fanback chair of Malayan rattan. He is the smartest dog in our block.

"I suppose you're wondering why I am here," said Mr. Virile, seating himself.

"Well, sir," I replied, my old eyes twinkling roguishly, "I'll wager you didn't come to read my meter."

You can imagine how we howled at that one!

"That's a doozy!" cried Mr. Virile, finally catching his breath.

"I must remember to tell it to Alice when I get home."

"Your wife?" I said.

"My father," he said,

"Oh," I said.

"But enough of wit and humor," he said. "Let us get down to business. How would you like to write a campus column for Personna Stainless Steel Razor Blades?"

"For money?" I said.

"Yes," he said.

"My hand, sir," I said and clasped his. Warmly he returned the pressure, and soft smiles played upon our lips, and our eyes were moist with the hint of tears, and we were silent, not trusting ourselves to speak.

"What will you write about in your campus column?" asked Mr. Virile when he was able to talk again.

"I will take up the burning issues that vex the American undergraduate!" I cried, bounding to my feet. "I will explore, without fear or favor, such explosive questions as 'Are roommates sanitary?' and 'Should proctors be given a saliva test?' and 'Should capital punishment for pledges be abolished?' and 'Can a student of 19 find happiness with an economics professor of 80?'"

"And will you also say a pleasant word from time to time about Personna Stainless Steel Razor Blades?" asked Mr. Virile.

"Sir," I said simply, "what other kind of word except pleasant could I possibly say about Personna Blades, which give me more luxury shaves than Beep-Beep or any other blade I might name?"

"Another of my products is Burma Shave," said Mr. Virile. "Can you find it in your heart to mention Burma Shave occasionally?"

"But of course!" I declared. "For is not Burma Shave the whisker-wiltingest lather in the land?"

"Yes," he admitted.

And then he shook my hand again and smiled bravely and was gone—a tall silhouette moving erectly into the setting sun. "Farewell, good tonsorialist!" I cried after him. "Aloha!"

And turned with a will to my typewriter.

GALE GARNETT'S NEW ALBUM

"LOVIN' PLACE"

Gale follows up her first big hit, "We'll Sing in the Sunshine," with her latest original composition, "Lovin' Place"—the title song in this new Dynagroove album of 12 top tunes. Among the numbers she lends her unique and exciting style to are "You Are My Sunshine," "Used to Live Here," "St. Louis Is A Long Way Away" and "Nobody Knows You When You're Down and Out." Here is a gal who's really going places.
