Name Change Squabble Debated In State House

The controversial bill to change the name of N. C. State flared up again at the State House yesterday as the House Committee on Higher Education conducted a hearing on the proposal.

The bill, introduced in the House last month by Rep. George Wood of Camden, would change the name of this institution to North Carolina State University at Raleigh. Wood is president of the State Alumni Association.

Consolidated University President William Friday said, "I believe with the Board of Trustees that adoption of House Bill 24 would effect a permanent division within the Consolidated University that would ultimately disrupt the plan of one university with several campuses."

However, Friday agreed with the arguments that the name change is basic and that the present name is not satisfactory.

Wood defended the bill by saying its purpose is simply to delete five words from the present title. He said it seeks no change in the "one university" concept.

Democratic Party treasurer C. A. Dillon Sr. of Raleigh said charges by those "who seek to confuse the issue by saying the result would be a dismantling" (of the university) are "dripping with dishonesty."

Student Government President John Atkins told the group, "The Student Government since December, 1962, has continuously passed resolutions asking for the name North Carolina State University."

He remarked, "All major organizations on the campus . . . have sent resolutions to me urging all that is possible be done in order that their institution's identity not be lost."

Asked by Rep. Thomas D. Bunn of Wake County if it would not strengthen the consolidated concept to have his office in Raleigh rather than elsewhere, Friday stated if the office were moved, it should be relocated on the State campus.

Friday noted that this would be a decision for the Board of Trustees to make.

In other action yesterday a bill was passed in both the House and the Senate to honor Everett Case, State's retired basketball coach. Plans are being made to present the four-page resolution to Case at the Atlantic Coast championship game at the Coliseum Saturday night.

Also introduced in both houses was a bill calling for a $1.5 million appropriation to establish a tobacco research laboratory at State.

Another in the recent series of fires on the State campus was discovered in the Frank Thompson Theatre at 10:46 p.m. Wednesday night, according to Hardy D. Berry, Director of Information.

Berry pointed out there were "approximately 15 people in the building itself at the time of the blaze. A Raleigh police officer had just left one of the offices in the theatre to call his station from his vehicle parked outside, Berry said.

The majority of the people in the building were working on an upcoming production. Stewart Taylor, one of the students who was in the building, saw the blaze and spread the alarm. Taylor and the policeman put out the blaze with a hand extinguisher, Berry said.

No estimate of the damage caused by the blaze has been made available. However a drawing by Randall Snyder of Greensboro was destroyed.

Snyder valued the painting at $45.

"There were some smoked places on the pegboard indicating that several attempts with matches had been made to set fires," said Berry.

The pegboard forms a dividing wall between the inside of the theatre and a gallery surrounding three sides of the seating area of the theatre. "It appears that when the pegboard failed to burn, the person responsible for the blazes then set fire to the drawing which had been matted and placed on exhibition in the gallery," Berry said.

Clogston Discusses Classic NCS Spends $190,000 For Athletic Grants

By JIM ROBINSON

"We know, we've got crooked guys in athletics. You've got crooked guy everywhere. But that's no reason for shutting off a tournament like the Dixie Classic."

So said Athletic Director Roy Clogston in a Technician interview which ranged over a wide variety of topics.

Clogston discussed the department's $213,000 budget, $190,000 of which is spent on athletic scholarships. "There is no secret about our scholarships," he stated.

According to the ACC conference rules, each college may give 140 scholarships in any sport it wishes. The scholarships cover board and room, tuition, incidental expenses, laundry, and $15 a month. The usual full scholarship is around $1,700, Clogston said, and partial scholarships are about $1,300.

With this kind of heavy investment in more than 150 State athletes, the department doesn't want to lose any of its boys, he stated. "We break our necks to have them graduate."

Speaking on the value of athletics at State in particular, and universities in general, Clogston said, "We compare with the best teams in the South. And, you know, educators won't tell you this, but if I mention Georgia Tech, what do you think of? Football, right? Or if I say something else you'd think of some other school."

Athletics, he claimed, is the "greatest advertising medium for colleges."

Fund-raising in general is a "yearly struggle," he said. Usually the budget is filled three-quarters by friends of State and alumni, and one-quarter by student fees and other sources, the director said. He said $60,000 a year comes from the Student Supply Stores, and some from the print shop.

The biggest and most loyal contributors are not State graduates, but prominent businessmen, Clogston said. The Carter Stadium fund-raising drive has so far raised $1 million in pledges and money with another $500,000 needed to complete the goal. One million is being borrowed by the department, he stated.

On the Dixie Classic issue, Clogston compared the closing down of the tournament to the closing of the University because of a murder or because of the recent campus fire. "The gambling was bad," he said, "but there was very little of it."

Asked what the athletic department's purpose is, Clogston said it is "to provide good healthy recreation for students, particularly ones who participate, and also the ones who enjoy watching it."

Other speakers this month include Dr. A. C. Menius, Dean of the PSAM school, and Dr. Arthur Kelman of the Department of Plant Pathology.

Mangled Math Misleading

The "Math Mangler" problem in yesterday's entertainment section was incorrect.

The problem should have read as follows: Show that the polynomial  $x^3 - 3x^2 + 2x^2$  is divisible by 3 for all integral values of  $x$ . The problem was submitted incorrectly by the Pi Mu Epsilon mathematics fraternity sponsors of the contest.

The Wolfpack rolled to a surprisingly easy 106-69 win over the Cavaliers of Virginia yesterday in the opening round of the Atlantic Coast Conference Tournament.

Virginia was never in the game after 5:10 of the first half had gone by. State led 10-9 at that point, and proceeded to open the lead to 20-11. Virginia closed in to 24-19, but it was State all the way from then on.

Three new records for tournament competition were set during the game. State set a record for the most points scored, 106, and the most field goals made, 45. The old records were 101 points, set by State against Clemson in 1955, and 41 field goals, set by Duke. One combination record was set, that being the most field goals by both teams, 70.

All of the State players scored from the floor, led by Larry Lakins with eight shots out of eleven. Lakins ended the night after 29 minutes and 20

CCB Convicts 2 In Train Damage

Two State students last night were convicted of a charge of destroying private property in downtown Raleigh.

Board Clerk Stuart Cooper stated that the two were arrested by the Raleigh City Police for damaging a train windshield by dropping rocks from the Pullen Street Bridge.

Judge Pretlow Winborn gave the students a four months' suspended sentence and fined them for damages and court costs. In addition, their drivers' licenses were revoked for 90 days and they were given three years' probation.

The Campus Code Board put them on probation status through summer school. The Board stated that it was being lenient because of Judge Winborn's "throwing the book at them." This is both students' first offense.

Campus Elections: Where Do You Belong?

The biggest activity created at election time tends to stem from two groups of students—the group that wants to make serious commitments to the campus and the group that wants to fight the opposition.

The difficult part comes when the nomination books close and the propaganda starts. It is sometimes confusing to decide which group is which or if either group is serious.

But that time of the year isn't here yet. The nomination books are still open, waiting for the crackpots and the serious-minded politicians and the in-betweeners to sign up.

With the preliminary activities still underway, there is time yet for the middle-of-the-road people to make a decision. Most likely the two extreme groups have already planned their strategy and are just waiting to see who else will join the race.

The old saying that there's a place for everyone holds true in campus politics. But the problem is in finding where you belong.

Is it in Student Government? We suggest that you think this one over several times. If you want to get in on the mainstream of campus politics, you might find a place here. But if you don't want to commit yourself to attending meetings twice a month and to working on committees, don't sign up. There are already too many senators who made this mistake last year.

Committing yourself should be a basic step in seeking any office, but you've got to consider your qualifications. What do you know about Student Government? You'd better ask around and find out what the job entails or you're apt to be in for some disappointments. It might require more than you're willing to cope with or, on the other hand, it might be less than you bargained for.

Don't limit your inquiries to the executive and legislative aspects of the system, however. There is also the judicial branch and the campus needs six qualified National Student Association delegates.

Or perhaps your place is in the class elections. The role of a class officer is only what the person elected makes it. It can be a productive role or it can be nothing. And if it's nothing, chances are nobody will notice.

If you're considering this position, we suggest that you contact the person who is currently holding the office you want and then take a look at your competition. It may be someone running for re-election. If so, by all means sign up, but plan to campaign. You'll need all the votes you can get.

Once you've combed the possibilities, you might change your mind about running. But don't despair. There isn't a candidate on campus who won't need an avid supporter.

CONTENTION

To the Editor:

Mr. Charles Steenburgh, in his letter that appeared in The Technician February 26, made some statements that I believe need to be commented upon. Let me say that this is not a letter in defense of Jim Ferguson as Mr. Ferguson seems to be quite capable of defending himself should he choose to do so.

This campus newspaper is supported in part by student fees without the free choice of the students. The students, however, do own the paper. The paper therefore has a duty to report all of the campus news objectively and to reflect the opinions of the students, or at least present them fairly.

Any opinion of the staff should be confined to three areas: the editorial column, those articles with a by-line, and any articles that clearly state that they are the opinion of the writer, and not in the selection of the news to be printed.

With few exceptions, the present Technician staff has done its job well. The point is that the students should not have to become members of the editorial staff in order to have their opinions as a group reported.

The majority of the students at N. C. State support the name change to North Carolina State University, and rightly so. No one is trying to deny that we are a part of the Consolidated University of North Carolina. However, N. C. State occupies a unique position in the University system. We are the only land-grant institution and we are the only school that offers undergraduate degrees in technical fields. We have obtained university status on our own, and we certainly do not have to ride on the coat-tails of any other established institution. The quality of instruction and the reputation of State have been developed over a number of years, starting long before the existence of the Consolidated University.

The reputation of this school enables it to receive grants, to carry on important research, and too, its reputation provides employers with a ready index to the qualifications of its graduates. To obtain an education is a fine end in itself, but to a vast majority of the students at State a degree from this institution is a means to an end, namely job opportunity.

Perhaps a simple analogy will illustrate my point. What would happen if General Motors (consolidated institution) decided to change the name of Cadillac (individual member) to Chevrolet (largest member)? The resultant loss of identity would surely damage the reputation of Cadillac and therefore its sales, and the confusion of a choice between two products of the same name without clearly defined advantages, but with real differences, would create much misunderstanding with the public.

I will be the first to admit that the already established reputation of State does not at this time extend to all of the courses being offered, but their reputation is being established at an institution now recognized for its quality of education.

It is to the advantage of these students to support the name change also. The name of University is of particular meaning to them and the years they spend in study will only be cheapened, not enhanced, by a change to the only other alternative, UNCR. It is very clear to me that the name must be changed. N. C. State of the University of North Carolina at Raleigh is neither fish nor fowl. N. C. State what? Is it a college, university, or a sub-station of The University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill? What is in a name, Mr. Steenburgh?

I do agree with Mr. Steenburgh on the speaker ban law. It is an insult to the integrity and judgment of everyone connected with State-supported institutions. Comment?

INDIGNATION AND HOPE

To the Editor:

Why was the young man—limping with a foot that had been badly mangled by a dropped filing cabinet—turned away from the N. C. State Infirmary on the morning after the Pullen fire?

After all, the night before when he immediately pitched in to help remove valuable records from fire-threatened Peele Hall . . . nobody asked him then for a student ID card.

Thank you.

SSS AGAIN

To the Editor:

I have read the many letters recently in The Technician concerning our Student Supply Store. Most of the criticism has been very general and without sound basis.

I do have one complaint which I am sure is shared by all other students. When I buy a textbook in the Supply Store with a publisher set price of $8.95 I have to pay $9.22.

As I understand the situation the 27 cents is for sales tax so that the Supply Store will not underprice privately owned book stores in Raleigh.

The Supply Store does not pay sales tax and to my knowledge other book stores in Raleigh do not carry textbooks.

Therefore to my way of thinking, the Supply Store pricing policy is unfair to students. The Supply Store should be able to make a reasonable profit without this added three per cent.

Glenn Smith

(Editor's Note: According to our information, the Student Supply Store does pay sales tax.)

CHANGE APPROVED

To the Editor:

We, the members of the Electrical Engineers' Wives' Club, would like to express our approval concerning the proposed calendar change. We feel that the adoption of this proposal would be most beneficial to the students.

If the calendar year were changed, exams would be completed before the Christmas holidays. Thus a return to school in January would initiate a new semester with no unfinished work from the preceding one.

We wish to thank the administration for their consideration of the calendar change and its benefits to the students.

By THOM FRASER

We again present more Daily Tar Heel "awards":

LIZARD OF THE WEEK: A picket at the Xerox Corporation protesting the company's sponsorship of the series on the United Nations. His sign read, "Xerox Promotes People-Eaters."

SIGNS OF OUR TIMES CITATION, or, HONORARY HIPPOCRATES AWARD: To Dr. Bill James of Hamlet, defeated candidate for Congress, discussing the liquor problem in his area: "We have a few people come (to the hospital) at night, but I don't have as much night work as I used to. Used to have to come up here and sew up a few almost every night, but since people around here stopped drinking paint thinner there isn't too much of that."

"Not since they got the whisky store in here. Before that these people were drinking paint thinner and Clorox, all kinds of things, and they'd just go wild. You'd have to call the police in here before you could sew 'em up. Just go crazy. I'm against whisky, I don't drink. But there's one thing the whisky store did. They're drinking bonded whisky now."

NEW IDEA IN NAME-CHANGE CRISIS: With the fires blazing away at our sister institution in Raleigh, perhaps it should be called "Pyro Tech."

To which we add an award of our own.

PITCHER OF THE WEEK: The fellow on the third floor of Turlington who on Wednesday afternoon hit us squarely three times in a row with water bombs as we walked along the street south of Turlington-Owen-Tucker. Anyone with talent like that ought not to be wasting his time studying at N. C. State. As a matter of fact, we would be quite happy to pay his fare to Castro Baseball Field, Havana.

We gleaned the following quickies from the Elon College Maroon And Gold:

Those who criticize the younger generation seem to forget who raised it.
