A west campus jam

The Jim Valvano Outstanding Person Award for 1984 was awarded to North Carolina Central student Angela Langely Wednesday night for her outstanding efforts to overcome many of the difficulties she has encountered resulting from her hand-ican.

Langely, a senior at Central, was born with oscogenisis imperfecta, a disease that causes brittle bones. When younger, she was able to walk with the help of braces and crutches, but because her condition was get-ting worse she had to start using a wheelchair when she entered junior high school.

She has overcome many difficulties by showing people that she is able to live a normal life by pursuing advanced studies on Central's campus. She is the first student to attend Central while confined to a wheelchair. Central's campus has not been facilitated with aids for the physically-handicapped student, but Langely decided that was not going to change her decision to enter the university of her choice.

Runoffs begin for SG offices

Run-off elections will be held today and Tuesday for the three major Student Government offices: student body president, Student Senate pres-ident and student body treasurer.

Ballot boxes will be placed at seven locations around campus: behind Link, at the south entrance of the free expression tunnel, on the Brickyard near D.H. Hill Library, at the Student Center, at the Dining Hall, at the Textiles School and at the Vet School.

Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity will man the polls.

According to Elections Board Chairman David Heller, all polls except those at the Dining Hall, the Vet School and the Textiles School will remain open from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. The Dining Hall poll will be manned from 8:30 a.m. to 6 p.m. and those at the Textiles and Vet Schools, he said, will operate for only several hours around lunch-10 a.m. to 1 p.m.

With the large amount of Student Government publicity, Heller said, "We're hoping the students will be eager to cast their votes."

Senate approves plus/minus grading

A resolution supporting the plus and minus grading system will be presented to the academic deans today for adoption consideration.

The Faculty Senate passed the resolution in a "close vote" during March, according to Sondra Kirsch, chairman of the Academic Policies Committee and associate professor in the recreation and resource administration department.

ministration department.

Kirsch said that many faculty members already use a plus/minus grading system until it comes to the final grades. Many professors feel the system would "give students the benefit of the doubt," Kirsch said.

Raymond Saxe, professor of nuclear engineering, disagrees. According to Saxe, one starts off with a precise grade, like a 92, separates it into one of five categories, and then the computer assigns a number to the grade which is not as precise. By then "you've lost all the precision," Saxe said.

Changes in the 2.0 graduation requirement will be one of the issues under consideration if the resolution is adopted, Kirsch said. One possibility would be to reduce the requirement to a C., she said.

benefit of the doubt." Kirsch said.

If adopted, plus/minus grading would not be made mandatory. Kirsch said. Instead, it would allow those professors who wished to use the plus/minus grading system to record grades as such on transcripts. John Franke, associate professor of math, is one faculty member who does not agree with the plus/minus system. There are already "five different categories." Franke said.

Ginny Lawler, communications director for the Department of Labor, said that OSHA is conducting an investigation, but that they "don't make a projection" as to when a report will be out. OSHA conducts hundreds of investigations at one time, and it is hard to tell just when a report will be ready. Lawler's said.

Alumni Association keeps graduates in touch with their alma mater

From the outside it is a typical red brick, Neo-Classical edifice, with its white columns and pediment, surrounded by dogwood trees and azaleas. This campus building. Incated just down from the Bell Tower, has no official name, but within its walls are the offices of the University Alumn in Association. Its director, Bryce Younts, as well as 14 staff members together run the association, which serves two distinct yet interrelated purposes.

The first of these is serving the needs of the alumni as its means of keeping in touch with the university, as a point of contact and information, as an organizer of alumni events and as a general voice on campus.

The second and often less evident purpose of the association is to support the university. The Alumni Association suffers from a slight image problem, or more specifically, an identity crisis on campus in terms of its campus support. "We're much more than a bunch of old fogeys," Younts said referring to the association. If students realized the degree of support generated by this body, then once these same students graduate, they may be more inclined to support the association in later years, Younts said.

The Alumni Association

The Alumni Association gets most of its money from approximately 20 percent of the university's alumni, which is above the national average in percentage contributions. In 1984, a goal of $1 million has been set for alumni givings. While some of this money is needed for office costs, salaries and expenses, over three-quarters actually goes into the university in three major categories: faculty and staff support, general university support and student assistance.

The first of these categories, faculty and staff support, consists of disting up is hed proprofessorships and fellow-ships.

The second category, general university support, includes library gifts, open house expenses, the State Advancement Fund and the Chancellor's Discre-tionary Fund.

The last category, student assistance, covers a broad scope of activities. Some of these include student loan fund, graduate student activities, miniature diplomas for new graduates, the North Carolina Fellows Program, freshman notebooks, Student Alumni Associates, special requests from student groups, class scholarships and named scholarship endowments and the Caldwell Scholarships, named after the former chancellor. These are $3,000 gifts given to outstanding entering freshmen for four years of study at State. While, in 1977, there were two of these scholarships, currently there are 44, including some in which a single alumnus has elected to finance in full. It is hoped that by 1986, the centennial year of the university, 100 Caldwell Scholarships will have been set up.

The Alumni Association is composed of several committees, each of which is chaired by an alumnus, as well as coordinated by a member of the full-time staff. The first of these is the Loyalty Fund, which is responsible for funding the association. This includes all contributions as well as matching funds, Century Club memberships, University Club memberships,

The second of these committees is publications, which puts out the recently improved and expanded journal, North Carolina State Alumni Magazine, as well as the Sportsletter. This committee also handles alumni publicity.

Students advise students on class scheduling

During preregistration in both the fall '83 and spring '84 semesters, the industrial engineering department at State experimented with a peer counseling system.

Several reasons for the initiation of the system are:

initiation of the Systemare:

(1) the need to free faculty from constant bombardment by students during the work week,

(2) to insure that students understand the course alternatives available,

(3) elimination of registration errors due to ignorance.

rance,
(4) to allow feedback from other students on the professors who teach the

The counseling system was designed to allow about a dozen juniors and seniors to select three hour shifts during the pregistration advising period. Each counselor was paid for his work and was allowed to work as little or as much as would fit into his or her schedule.

Results have been excellent, and everyone involved agrees that the system is an improvement over the old one.

Each counselor attended a meeting concerning the types of information which could be discussed by the types of information which counselors. The counselors were instructed in the proper use of departmental manuals and were told not to handle a student's preregistration form until the student had filled in most of the course listings and call numbers. This assured that the Each counselor attended service did not degenerate into a babysitting service.

The majority of positive comments from students about the service concerned the benefits from learning about different teaching styles of the different instructors. The counselors were free to advise students on the selection of professors in a particular course, if that counselor has taken the course under that professor. The second most frequently received com-ment was that the service cleared up misunderstand-ings involving selection of technical and non-technical

The IE department will continue to use the peer counseling system and suggests that other de-partments consider a simi-lar system to increase the efficiency of student pre-registration. By allowing students who have previously taken the courses in question the freedom to comment on course and professor selections, along with the increase in time with the increase in time and concern given students using the system, IE facul-ty and students believe that the new system of advising and signing pre-registration forms is the most effective alternative yet discovered.

Finally.

These are really THE student body elections because very little was decided in the original elections other than to thin out the field in the major seats. (No insult intended for those who won outright in the Senate, Pub Board or Judicial Board or for the winner of the Student Center presidency).

In the original elections, we declined to make precise endorsement because of the size of the fields and the lack of knowledge of all the candidates. We will be more precise this time.

We make endorsements based on our opinion of the candidates and the positions to be filled. We pick candidates based on who we feel will best fill a particular seat. These are just our opinions, and we encourage all voters to make their decisions based on what they want for a particular position and what they know about the candidates.

STUDENT BODY PRESIDENT

STUDENT BODY PRESIDENT

This is the highest elected position that a student at State can hold. This means that very careful deliberation must be made in deciding who to vote for and why. In our opinion, the student body president should be a hard-working student, the type who gets things done by virtue of hard work and persistence. He doesn't have to be a politician. He should impress those he deals with by the way he gets things done, not by the way he talks. Obviously, this is the perfect student body president, one that is rarely found.

To that end, we feel that Shannon Carson fits this description the best. He has

To that end, we feel that Shannon Carson fits this description the best. He has proven himself in his work as chairman of the Publications Authority for the past two years, a position that does not require eloquence in speech but places importance on Carson would make a good, dependable and hard-working student body president. Judging from the events of the past semester, it may be good to bring "new blood" into Student Government.

STUDENT SENATE PRESIDENT

STUDENT SENATE PRESIDENT

This position, in contrast, requires a person who has an ability to control a meeting and retain order. He must be a person who can work with people and is popular and well-liked by the persons he works with-primarily, the senators.

Both Steve Greer and Perry Woods have distinguished themselves this year as senators, running one-and-two in the voting for senator-of-the-year, with Woods winning. Greer did an excellent job presiding over the Senate recently when Rich Holloway voluntarily stepped down during the impeachment trial of Jim Yocum. Woods has shown himself to be a hard-working senator with much enthusiasm.

Due to the fact that Woods has also worked for Technician for most of this year, we feel that we should not make an endorsement decision in this race because of a conflict of interest. Two candidates in this race can immediately be picked as the best person for the job due simply to their experience as senators. Both Brenda White and Kevin Hight have been hard-working senators for the past several years, and have the experience edge in this race due simply to their years in the Senate.

This position, like all others, needs both experience. White and Hight both have this experience. Hight has also been in a leadership role the past two years as Senate secretary.

Their opponent, Gary Mauney, needs both experience — he is a freshman — and some practice in decisiveness. In the impeachment trials of both Jim Yocum and Steve Hilliard, Mauney spoke out in favor of impeachment, but later abstained in the final roll-call votes.

THE OFFICIAL POLITICAL PLOY ARE 1984 OLYMPICS

The most unique generation ever

It pains me to admit this, but I belong to a generation that has become disgustingly respectable. I'm not knocking respectability per se, but there is a matter of style involved here that disturbs me greatly.

When I was growing up back in the late '60s, the folks who comprise 'My Generation' (thank you Peter Townsend) were out to change the world and such baloney as that, much like new adults of any generation. We failed, of course, but we did succeed in marking our generation as perhaps the most unique generation ever, for good or ill. Take your pick. What has become of us is getting downright distressing. A few weekends ago. I attended a showing of the movie Easy Rider at the local late show. Seeing that museum piece set me to thinking. What if the characters played by Peter Fonda and Dennis Hopper had lived to see another day and another decade or two? What if someone decided to make a 1980's sequel to Easy Rider?

The subject would probably be how Hopper and Fonda traded their motorcycles in for Volvos, their leather clothes for expensive and useless jogging outfits and their idealistic and moral integrity for cold, hard cash. They would more than likely be Yuppies. Uggggdh.

The other week, a syndicated columnist from The Los Angeles Times ran a column about Yuppies and the generation that spawned them, a generation that has come full circle. I honestly couldn't tell you just what this columnist actually felt about Yuppies. She was far too ambitwalent for me to figure out exactly where she stood on the subject. I won't be so vague.

Although I meet some of the criteria for Yuppiedom, let me state emphatically that I consider myself anything but a Yuppie.

Editorial Columnist

Sure, I am still fairly young, I live in an urban area and I have a very promising career, although as a writer I like to think that I have some latitude to play with when it comes to conforming to professional standards.

Socially, I don't have to worry about conforming, especially to the trendy standards that Yuppies have set for themselves. I don't jog, and if I did I wouldn't spend a lot of money on some fancy running suil just for un and sweat in. I have a soiled Durham Bulls sweatshirt that I can sweat in, and I like to wear it when I watch sports on TV, which is what I do, for exercise.

I'm not especially fond of camping out either, which some Yuppies are fond of doing. You have to get out of the citly once in a while, and camping is a good way to "get in touch with nature," a phrase some Yuppies used to say in their younger days. I do my camping in hotel rooms, and I get in touch with nature by tripping over the winos who pass out in the park behind my house when I am leaving the local bars.

It's hard to figure out the entire generation that Yuppies came from. A good many of them, of course, are ex-"hippies," and enough of those relics are still around to take a careful scrutinizing look at. Many of the "hippies" who are still around work in those weird restaurants that sell seawed and sprout salads and those funny teas that smell like atter-shave lotion and taste like petunia petals.

Not me. I like regular old Lipton tea and plain old garden vegetables. I won't eat anything that I can't grow in my backyard with a regular dose of tender loving care, air pollution and acid rein. And I'm not about to go to some health food restaurant and pay outrageous prices to be served weird (bad) food by a waitress wearing a paisley peasant skirt with eight pounds of turquoisse jewelry and says such things as "like, wow" and "far out" all the time.

You lose no matter which way you turn. I hate to think that I have dropped out of my own generation, but I can turn my back on it from time to time. The "Pepsi Generation" has become the "Diet Soda Generation, and I'm not following. It's all a matter of style.

and I'm not tollowing. It is weirdstyle.

Any generation as out-front in its weirdness as mine was in the late '60s figures to be equally out-front as it embraces the American mainstream. I see no harm in all generation of dropouts dropping back in, but there is a certain amount of dignity that the post-World War II baby-boom generation (my generation) seems to be woefully lacking.

post-World War II baby-boom generation (my generation) seems to be woefully lacking.

Why we can't just age quietly and go about the business of our lives is beyond mg, Instead we have to be Yuppies. Or live in the past. We certainly are carving more than our share of niches into Americana. I just hope we don't carve too much. When this generation approaches senior citizenship, what then?

And which good old days will be the good what then?

And which good old days will be the good old days? Hippiedom or Yuppiedom? I'm going to watch the whole thing on TV. It'll be a movie called Easy Yuppie. I wouldn't miss that one for anything.

Melting-pot atmosphere of game gone

WASHINGTON — A few years back, former San Francisco Giants manager Alvin Dark lamented in his memoirs that there were few true students of baseball — only the armchair variety. "Everybody. my 83-year-old mother included." wrote Dark, 'thinks they learned all there was to know about it at puberty."

But what bothered Dark has helped make baseball the national pastime. In the stands as on the field, everyone is an expert. Indeed, only at a baseball game can a corporate president sit next to a plumber and discuss the merits of a rookie pitcher's curve ball.

Unfortunately. America's baseball discuss the merits of a rookie pitcher's curve ball.

Unfortunately. America's baseball stadiums may not deserve their melting-pot image any longer. The whole meaning of an outing to a ball park has changed for the worse.

For starters, baseball fans today are increasingly separated by economic means. Financially-pressed ball clubs have undermined the populist tradition of ball parks by offering a series of multi-priced tickets that matches the stratification of an opera matinee. A walk through any box seat section these days reveals a controlled, sober crowd that munches on nachos.

In Baltimore, for example, a fan has a choice of purchasing seven different types of seats: Lower boxes ($6.50), lower and upper reserve ($6.00), general admission ($4.75) and the bleachers ($3.50). Similar choices are offered in other big league cities.

Moreover, good seats for weekend games and contests between intensely rival teams are harder to come by. In Chicago this season, the chances of purchasing a box seat for a White Sox game won't be good unless one's a season ticket-holder for weekend games.

Without most fans knowing it, businesses.

seats, have consumed the best seats at most stadiums. An unofficial survey of team ticks sales this year suggests more season passes are being sold than ever before. The world champion Baltimore Orioles, for example, had 6.032 season ticket-holders last year.
This season, the Birds have unloaded more than 12.000 such tickets. Likewise, in Los Angeles, the Dodgers have had to place a ceiling of 27.000 seats for season ticketholders.

The price of baseball tickets is increasing for everyone. Half of all American League teams have raised their ticket prices this season (only a quarter of all National League teams have done so). The average price of a ticket to a major league baseball game is now $5.93.

Meanwhile, the traditional atmosphere of ticket to a major jeague basebail game is now $5.93.

Meanwhile, the traditional atmosphere of ball parks is dissipating too. You need only look at what's being offered to eat there to understand how. Gone are the days of inexpensive hot dogs, peanuts and popcorn. Everything is more expensive and exotic at baseball stadiums. Now you can buy shrimp at Fenway Park and Swedish ice cream at Shea Stadium, not to mention manicotti at the Dodgers' home in Chavez Ravine.

"We're serving specialty foods at stadiums to keep our new clientled happy," explained an official with the Harry M. Stevens Co., which has the concession rights at many ball parks.

Of course, the corporate clients who purchase season tickets aren't the only ones to blame for the changing nature of American ball parks. Nor, for that matter, are the financially-strapped clubs. They're only doing what's necessary to stay solvent in an era of enormous players salaries.

Equally culpable are Congress and the White House. Until they end business tax deductions for sports tickets. Big Business will continue to consume large blocks of tickets, making it almost impossible for fans to gain entry to stadiums built with their tax money. We don't expect such a revolutionary change to occur. But maybe other people will start to wonder when their ball parks install conference rooms for use by high-paying fans during the seventh-inning stretch.

Effectiveness gone

I read with interest your series of articles regarding the Student Government impeachments. I was not surprised that former student body president and treasurer. Nick Stratas successfully acted as defense representative for the accused. I am writing, however, to make a point. Students, in general, only care about what affects them, not ego trips or petty student politics.

affects them, not ego trips or petty student politics.

Today, I have trouble seeing the tangible effects of our student governments. In sharp contrast to this was the Student Government of Stratas' time. Whether you mail a letter using the Campus may system, make a call on a "free phone", copy a quiz 'iron the Student Government quiz file on a 5- copier, etc..., you enjoy the benefits of the hard work of Nick Stratas. Robb Lee, and others.

People. like them, who care sincerely and do so without searching for personal acclades are rare but so necessary in government. They were people of action and compassion.

Grid alumni enjoy spotlight again

Dan Golden, wiping his perspiring face with the back of a heavily-taped hand, smiled whole-heartedly.

"I had really forgotten how wonderful it is here."

like to stay, but I know I can't."
Golden, who traveled over 5,000 miles from Anchorage, Ak., to play in Saturday's first-annual Alumni Game at Carter-Finley Stadium, had just joined over 100 former Wolfpack ballplayers in recapturing at least a small trace of gridiron glory.

For the record, coach Tom Reed's Varsity squad outpointed the pepped-up— and sometimes rule-bending— Alumni by a 14-10 score in front of 2,800 fans.

Those who did get in — and practically the entire Alumni squad did on a game-ending onside kick attempt — proved to be no slouches.

Tom Higgins, an all-ACC selection in '75 and a League teams, stood out at the Alumni's linebacker-middle guard position. Now the defensive coordinator for the University of Calgary, Higgins returned an interception 21 yards and made countless tackles as the surprisingly strong Alumni defense held the Pack Varsity to only 97 yards rushing. "We knew it would be tough to get our offense going," admitted Alumni quarterback Dave Buckey, an all-ACC pick in '75. "But with the response we got from our defensive guys, we knew we would be slugging it out with them." Slug the Alums did, but the offense could never get untracked. Equipped with play sheets in the huddle, signal-callers Scott Smith (80) and John Isley ('80) joined Buckey in repeated efforts to catch the Pack's secondary napping. But besides a 3d-yard deflected pass from Buckey to BJ. Lyttle ('76) and a nifty 3d-yard strike from Isley to Todd Baker ('81), the Alumni offense was difficult to detect.

"When you have two days to memorize plays when you've got players from four or five different eras, it's a little difficult." Buckey said. "But I think everyone just really had a great time.

"And I'm sure tonight will be a lot of fun, too." Buckey said, referring to Saturday night's dinner-banquet in the McKimmon Center.

And so — amid suggestions from a number of tired, but smiling Alumni to quaff a few brews — the playing field slowly began to clear Saturday afternoen.

But most of the replaying field slowly began to clear Saturday afternoon.

But most of the returnees were reluctant to teep out of their proudly-worn red and white uniforms and back into their husband and daddy roles. Rather, they seemed to bask in the glory, retelling past memories as well as ones made moments before, signing autographs and holding future Wolfpackers-to-be in their arms.

It was a fitting end to a memorable weekend. And one which Reed hopes will be repeated.

"We'll get some feedback and see what happens," Reed said. "But I think they all do want to come back."

Between the lines weakness in depth, but was encouraged with his tea

Pack thin, but developing

Assistant Sports Editor

Tom Reed looked quite satisfied. He had just seen every player on his squad perform against Wolfpack heros of the past in the first-annual Alumni Game and was now standing back and taking stock of what had transpired Saturday afternoon at CarterFinley Stadium.
"We - simply could have not had a game fif it hadn't been for these alumni," Reed said, ree-mphasizing a lack of depth brought on by an abundance of springtime injuries. "We're just very, very thin right now. One injury would set us back light years.

"But," Reed added,
"we have accomplished
an awful lot this spring.
We have developed some intensity and competitiveness that was not there before.
Our young players have become through and become starters and our older players have become dominating."
Besides being a rather hard-fought battle for Reed's troops, the 14-10 scrimmage win over the Alumni may go a long way toward developing his team's attitude and perception of itself.
"We wanted our players to get to know
these alumni," Reed
said. "We wanted them to see that they are just the same kind of people we are. Many of them were a part of great teams — bowl teams. State has a very rich tradition, and it's not that far back. So we wanted to bring it back and show the players." Individually. Reed spoke well of starting quarterback Tim Esposito who, after a record-setting junior campaign, will return behind center this fall. Esposito played one quarter, completing 7-0-9 passes for 103 yards.

"Tim is bigger, stronger and quicker now." Reed said. "He's going to be sharp next season."
