

Hunt rallies at Link, greets relay runners

Liz McCabe
Staff Writer

"This campaign is like the last minute of an ACC basketball game. We can't rest until it's over," said Governor James Hunt to student supporters who gathered in the Link lobby Sunday night at the end of a week-long spirit relay.

Relay runners started Tuesday from Elizabeth City in the eastern part of the state and from Asheville in the west, said Helen White, media coordinator for the Students for Hunt Spirit Relay.

The course took the runners through various cities in North Carolina, passing through 76 colleges and ending up at State on Sunday night.

The reason for the spirit relay was to "show support for Jim Hunt through the students," White said.

Hunt came to State Sunday night to greet the final relay runners and to speak to his supporters. At the start of his speech, Hunt thanked the co-chairmen of the Students for Hunt Spirit Relay, Mike McGee and Kevin Bunn. Hunt also thanked his daughter Rachel, who served as honorary chairperson.

The governor was presented with two red, white and blue sashes on behalf of student supporters across the state.

Hunt stressed to the crowd the importance of supporters in his campaign.

"This election may be won on any one of the campuses in this state," Hunt said. "In these last four weeks I want you to talk to your fellow students and your friends about the things that matter."

Hunt discussed several campaign issues. "The difference between Jesse Helms and me is absolutely clear cut," Hunt said.

"I want to help this nation to build the best schools in the world," he said. "Jesse Helms voted to slash college loans and wants to cut out all federal aid to education. That would mean 20,000 students in this state would be knocked out of college immediately."

"Equality matters," Hunt said. "To provide equality, I'm committed to strong affirmative action and passage of the Equal Rights Amendment."

"Jesse Helms wants to repeal Title 9 of the Civil Rights Act," Hunt continued. "That's the title under which equal opportunity for women is provided for on this campus."

"Environment also matters," Hunt said. "I'm committed to reducing acid rain and enlarging and strengthening Super Fund. Helms takes pride in saying that he voted against the Environmental Protection Agency budget."

Hunt again stressed the importance of the student voters.

"No young person should be voting for that old guy," Hunt said of Helms. "He may be old in years, but he's ancient in ideology."

After his speech, Hunt was presented with a "Helms-buster" T-shirt by Mike Parker, president of the College Democrats.

The governor stayed for a reception held after the rally.

College democrats view debate, raise spirits for end of campaign

The televised presidential debate played to an audience of about 50 Mondale partisans Sunday night in the lounge of Tompkins Hall.

The beer and food were provided by the College Democrats, but the real high spirits came from Mondale's performance in the debate.

The crowd, many of whom had gotten fired up earlier at the Hunt spirit rally in Link Plaza, were unanimous in their belief that Mondale was the victor.

"Tonight shows that Reagan doesn't have a monopoly on State's support," Michael Parker, president of the College Democrats, said.

When asked about national support for Reagan and the poll showing Reagan with a lead in 48 states, Parker said, "The only poll that counts is the Nov. 6 poll."

Students attending the party were optimistic that the debate would help Mondale in his campaign.

"Tonight is a turning point for Mondale," State student Sandra McCanus said.

"These debates will mark a time when people stop looking at the personalities and look at the issues," Henry Jarrett, past president of the College Democrats, said.

As the debate began, the spectators interrupted with cheers, laughs and sarcastic ad-libbing.

The students had various responses to the debate.

All of the students believed that the debate was fair and that Mondale had proven his knowledge of the issues.

"I feel the people that watched this debate will clearly be able to see the differences in the two candidates," McCanus said.

"Reagan was obviously not prepared and doesn't know his bipartisan plans," McCanus said.

"Mondale did what Reagan did to Carter in the 1981 debate," Bill Young, president of the Taylor Sociology Society, said.

"Mondale backed up his positions with point by point facts," Young said.

The students were also critical of Reagan's response, or lack of response, to the national deficit.

"Reagan is dodging the issues," student David Eichenberger said.

"Reagan is hiding behind the deficits. He has no plans for these deficits."

"The Republicans latch onto emotional issues like abortion and school prayer instead of facing issues that affect society like the deficit and the arms race," James Gallion, a sophomore in civil engineering, said.

Some students complained of the restraints of the debate.

"Strictly adhering to the rules of the debate, by not allowing two or three rebuttals, doesn't draw the candidates out," Jarrett said.

When Parker was asked whether the debate would enable Mondale to overcome Reagan's lead in the campaign, he was doubtful.

"I don't think this debate will give Mondale the support he needs to overcome Reagan's lead, but I think the next debate will," Parker said.

The College Democrats also provided voter registration booths at the party in an attempt to sign up last minute voters before the Monday registration deadline.

Twelve people were registered during the party.

The College Republicans will be organizing a group to watch the Bush and Ferraro debate Thursday night at the Republican headquarters on Hillsborough Street.

Professor presents technical papers in USSR

Barry Bowden
Managing Editor

A State professor will represent the U.S. at the U.N. Conference on low-waste, non-waste technology.

Don Huisingsh, a university studies professor, will present four papers and convene a panel discussion at the worldwide symposium in Tashkent, U.S.S.R., Oct. 15-19.

At the symposium, papers from around the world will be presented, many of them on specific ways that products that are currently regarded as waste can be turned into profitable products, Huisingsh said.

"These are economically profitable, ecologically sound, and technically feasible ways to reduce waste," he said.

Huisingsh's paper, "A Comprehensive Strategy for Achieving and Maintaining a Safe, Clean Environment through Emphasis upon Pollution Prevention," proposes ways to promote a worldwide switch from pollution control to pollution prevention.

"Until now, the attitude has been to clean up the waste after it has been produced," Huisingsh said. "We need to shift that attitude towards pollution prevention so that we don't produce it in the first place."

"That's where the Europeans have such an advantage over us. Conceptually, they don't even use the term 'waste,'" he said. "They use the term 'residual'."

We need to shift that attitude towards pollution prevention so that we don't produce it in the first place.

-Don Huisingsh

"What do you do with waste? You throw it away. But you can use a residual product," Huisingsh said.

Besides his own paper, he will be presenting papers from Marvin Rubin from the EPA, Russell Susag of 3M, and Arthur Purcell, a professor at Georgetown University.

Huisingsh will also lead a panel discussion on the development of a global education network on the concepts of pollution prevention and pollution reduction. He envisions a network of 10 to 15 centers around the world linked by a satellite communication system by 1986.

Such a system would allow for worldwide teleconferences that would greatly accelerate the rate of education on pollution prevention, Huisingsh said.

"Around the world, leaders are coming to the same conclusions about the benefits of pollution prevention," he said. "With improved communication, we can stop people from having to essentially re-invent the wheel."

According to Huisingsh, such a satellite system is technically feasible now and would greatly reduce the cost of global conferences such as the one he will be attending.

Huisingsh will be leaving Friday for meetings with the EPA and the State Department before heading for Russia. He will also be spending two and a half days in Geneva, Switzerland, for a UN conference the global educational network.

Report says peat mining could upset ecological balance

Shishir Shonek
Science Editor

Peat, the damp, spongy material formed by decaying plant matter, is best known for its use in horticulture. However, it is gaining recognition as a methanol source and solid fuel. Using peat as fuel is not a new concept, but only recently have scientists seriously entertained the idea of using the abundant substance as a mass-market fuel. Some companies have already proposed major peat mining operations on North Carolina's Albemarle-Pamlico Peninsula, which would bring tremendous changes to the areas in question.

But, according to a State-based research team, extensive peat mining on the peninsula could degrade water quality in fish and shellfish habitats and deteriorate natural black bear and bobcat habitats.

David A. Adams, associate professor of University Studies and Forestry, coordinated the efforts of 16 researchers from State, UNC-Chapel Hill, Duke University, East Carolina University and the N. C. Department of Natural Resources and Community Development (NCRCD). The year-long study was administered by the University of North Carolina's Water Resources Research Institute and culminated in the presentation of a 418-page report released last month.

The group's findings were presented to NCRCD's Coastal Management Program, which commissioned the study last year, using $55,000 in funding from the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

The group did not evaluate any particular project. Instead, the members developed three 20-year environmental scenarios to look at various impacts of mining, handling and peat conversion.

The most drastic of the scenarios assumed that all the substantial peat deposits in the area, not including buffer strips along rivers, were mined and a total of 94,000 acres was gradually reclaimed.

Another scenario projected the impact of only the mining already permitted and proposed 17,360 acres over 20 years.

Finally, the team developed a scenario that assumed that the peat industry failed in the 10th year after 8,520 acres had been mined. That allowed members to see what would happen if previously mined land was abandoned and left to flood.

Apparently, some impacts would be minor or even preventable. Still, they said large scale mining would mean "a loss of part or much of the state's largest and least disturbed wetland complex." Says Adams, "If the 'worst case' scenario came to pass, there would really be concern about the potential threat to estuary quality and wildlife habitat."

Two developments during the past year were noted by the researchers but did not affect their conclusions. A proposal for a peat-methanol conversion project was cancelled this February, and in March about 120,000 acres, mostly in Dare County, became the Alligator River National Wildlife Refuge.

Judith Gale, editor of the report, said the methanol project's cancellation should give the state much needed time for further study and planning.

The team reported to the NCRCD that if major increases in peat mining occurred, nitrogen and phosphorus would be discharged into the Alligator and Pungo rivers in quantities that would degrade the rivers and estuaries, areas where the rivers and seaweed.

Under any of the scenarios, the report said, "serious water quality degradation may result from the changes in land use and from the associated industrial development in this region." mining also might change the salinity and levels of suspended solids, trace elements, pesticides and coliform, or fecal bacteria in the estuaries.

The long-term impact of the combined changes could not be predicted, and the group recommended that a model be developed for estimating such effects. The estuaries are prime nursery areas for fish and shellfish and are mainstays of the local economy. In addition, "a significant proportion of the currently existing black bear and bobcat habitat will be lost if extensive mining takes place."

The researchers also concluded that: "Potential problems with freshwater runoff into the bays and saltwater intrusion into groundwater supplies should be preventable. While mining could increase freshwater runoff by up to 30 percent, the report said control techniques such as floodwater storage and filtering through wetland buffers are available. It is also possible to prevent saltwater intrusion.

"Prime Atlantic white cedar habitat would be diminished.

"Reclaimed mined land could add up to $30 million to the net value of agriculture and timber over the 20-year period, depending on the particular scenario.

"Air pollution effects cannot be predicted without an expensive, sophisticated study. It was noted that the team had questions about the impact of multiple-smokestack peat processing plants on air quality.

"Disposing of solid wastes generated by large scale peat-methanol conversion could be a problem because there do not seem to be adequate disposal sites in the area.

"While the peat industry could boost the local economy, time lags and uneven distribution of the new tax revenues could make it difficult for local governments to respond to associated demands for housing and services.

"There have been and are going to be many more of these complex environmental issues in North Carolina," said Adams. "The agencies have the ability to manage, but they don't have the ability to find out what's going on." The proposed Natural Resources Research Center at State would be able to muster broad expertise for such projects in the future.

Pre-vets clean dogs for club funds

Sarah Durant
Feature Writer

There are a lot of clean canines running around today thanks to the Pre-vet Club, which held its bi-annual dog wash at State's vet school during Open House Saturday.

The cost of having your dog's coat shampooed, blow dried, trimmed and brushed ranged from three to seven dollars depending on the size of the dog and the thickness of the dog's coat. The larger the dog and the thicker the coat meant a higher cost. All the proceeds went towards a scholarship fund for pre-vet students entering the School of Veterinary Medicine.

According to the club's president, senior Gene Long, the club raised $750 at last year's dog washes. Long was pleased with Saturday's turnout as well and was happy to report that "there had been no dog fights."

The club members washed the dogs with great care, checking the dogs for ear mites and reporting any noticeable skin irritations to the dog owners.

Senior Glenna Kunkel, the club's vice president, said that "the dog wash is a great way for the club members to get better acquainted." Kunkel also said that "the fund raiser helps the pre-vet students gain more experience in the veterinary field."

Kunkel's advice to dog owners is to have dogs washed frequently in the summer to avoid fleas and ticks and about twice during the colder months. However, Kunkel stressed the importance of washing dogs inside when the weather is cold to prevent illness.

Although he may not admit it now, this dog will be much happier thanks to the dog wash held by the Pre-vet Club.

New column offers students personal advice

Do you have questions and concerns about school, relationships, sex, test anxiety, classes, drugs and alcohol, sex...? We are beginning a new feature for all of you out there who have questions about these and other issues. Our intent is to provide some sound advice and to let you express your opinions.

This column will be written by two trained individuals, one male and one female. We are on the State campus but are not undergraduates, are not connected with Technician and are not part of the Counseling Center (although we intend to consult with the Counseling Center).

Here is how the column will work. Bring your questions in person or mail them to Technician, Box 8608 Student Center, and the questions will be delivered to us. Don't include your name or address. As long as the questions are in sealed envelopes, they will be completely confidential and no one at Technician will see them. Once a week or so, we will answer as many as space permits.

So don't be bashful. If you have questions or concerns, write them down and send them in.

Women's Chorale, Enloe Girl's Ensemble to present program

The Women's Chorale and a special guest performing group will present a Festival of Song on Friday, Oct. 19, at 8 p.m. The Girl's Ensemble from Enloe High School will be the special guest. The group is directed by Joel Adams.

Eleania Ward, the director of State's Women's Chorale, says that the entertainment will include "everything from show music to seasonal music." The central theme of the presentation will be autumn.

The two musical groups will perform individually, and then they will combine for the finale. The concert is free and open to the public. According to Ms. Ward, "It will be an enjoyable evening. Bring friends and family."

The Women's Chorale is one of the musical groups here at State. Women can audition at the beginning of either semester to become a member. Some other activities of the group include performing for the Governor's Morehead School for the Blind and for the Spectrum House. They also have an annual event called Cookies and Carols. The event takes place during December in the University Student Center. Carols are sung, and the audience is invited to join in on selected songs. The members bake cookies and distribute them among the audience.

Opinion

A paper that is entirely the product of the student body becomes at once the official organ through which the thoughts, the activity and in fact the very life of the campus are registered. It is the mouthpiece through which the students themselves talk. College life without its journal is blank.

Strange bedfellows

Politics this year have created some very strange bedfellows.

It was announced this week that Eddie Knox, former mayor of Charlotte and an unsuccessful candidate for governor this year, was named as one of three national leaders of the "Democrats for Reagan" group. Amazing.

Is this not the same Eddie Knox who was for years a mainstream Democrat? The same Eddie Knox who was defeated in the gubernatorial primary by a more conservative candidate, Rufus Edmisten? Is this not the same Eddie Knox who for years upheld the basic philosophies of the Democratic party?

Apparently not. The answers and explanations given by Knox and the various Republicans who have proclaimed and applauded the crossover are skimpy at best.

Knox says he has always admired President Reagan. He apparently wants everyone to think he is making the change because he is simply supporting the better man.

Let's examine the situation. Political parties have, by nature, a collection of voters and candidates with similar political views and beliefs. They select their candidates because they believe in roughly the same things. Although the Democratic party has a wide variety of stances ranging from very liberal to moderately conservative, most members, and certainly most candidates, have little in common with the opposition party.

So was the case with Knox. Although Knox was not an ultra-liberal, he appeared to have little in common with Republican candidates, especially far-right candidates such as Reagan and Jesse Helms. This is certainly a fair assumption, judging from Knox's record.

So comes the argument that Knox is simply supporting the better man. If we are voting for the man and not what he believes in, as many voters unfortunately do, why have political parties? Why group voters according to political beliefs and place labels on all of them if what the candidate believes makes no difference?

Has Knox "seen the light" and become conservative (in total opposition to his record), as some Republicans would have people believe? Or is it sour grapes — a little-boy pout because Democrats did not adequately support him in the governor's race? Published reports have attributed Knox's political shift to financial problems — a campaign debt that only the Republicans could lend a hand with.

Either way, it is a clear demonstration that Knox the politician is not as loyal to his beliefs as he would have had people believe during his campaign.

Education lacks diversity

This year's political mudslinging has brought to light an issue that has been overlooked, the growing "criminal stupidity" of the average voter.

Don't blame the voter in every case. How can a voter be expected to make intelligent choices without the educational background to know what the issues are?

In my high school and others across North Carolina, students sign up for the humanities or social science class of their choice. I signed up for Ms. Smith's sociology class instead of Mrs. Murphy's American history class because the tests were much easier in Ms. Smith's class.

As a result, I couldn't give you a definition of philosophy, much less discuss any current philosophical question when I graduated from high school. I am no Aristotle now, but I at least know why some people oppose abortion and why others support it.

I don't imagine there has been a tremendous change in the attitude of high school students in the last three years. And I am sure that more students still sign up for Ms. Smith's sociology class than Mrs. Murphy's American history class.

What distresses me is that I see this trend among the student body at State. Family Systems is certainly a valuable course to anyone interested in starting a family some day. It is not a substitute for 20th Century American History as part of a general education.

In a recent interview, Chancellor Bruce

BARRY BOWDEN
Editorial Columnist

Poulton stated that a university had to be complete in its course offerings to call itself a university. According to Poulton, without a diverse course offering, a university ceases to be a university and becomes a training school.

The problem is not a lack of diversity in the curriculum. It is a lack of time or interest on the part of students. The engineering student who is hard pressed to complete the required courses in his major in eight semesters is understandably reluctant to spend many hours in British Literature. Members of the medical profession have long been recognized as some of the most highly trained but also the most poorly educated people in the nation. To combat this, medical schools have taken steps to ensure that its graduates are well-rounded.

Maybe the university needs to examine the value of making its professional curricula a bit broader and a bit less intensive. Meanwhile, students should take it upon themselves to at least sample the range of course offerings at State to avoid becoming trained instead of educated.

State has a strong school of humanities and social sciences. It seems a pity that its students do not use its resources to educate themselves instead of using them to pad their schedules with classes to improve their GPAs. Who cares if a student graduates with a 3.5 if he can't be a responsible citizen by voting intelligently?

Today's issues require that voters be more informed than ever. Voters can't decide if deficit spending poses a serious threat to the future strength of the economy if they don't know the difference between private and public debt.

A strong background in the humanities is not a guarantee that a voter will be educated on all the issues. A thorough knowledge of U.S. history won't help a voter decide how to vote on some pressing ecological issues like acid rain. Basic chemistry and maybe some engineering courses will help a voter decide what measures are necessary to prevent damaging the environment.

Citizens in a democratic government have a unique and powerful right — the right to vote. But with that right comes an equally unique and powerful obligation — an obligation to vote intelligently.

Maybe college students aren't mature enough to decide which classes would be beneficial to them as citizens. Perhaps decisions of this nature are best left to the administration. A year of general college with an emphasis in history, English, economics, philosophy and the basic sciences would certainly make for a more intelligent electorate.

Mondale, Reagan debate over deficits, taxes

Well done, Henry Jarrett. I agree with his position in his Technician article on political labels. He states that labels are merely "political shorthand" and "can be useful if used in context with a party or candidates' stands on the issues." Recently, I was intrigued by the debate between Mondale and Reagan on whether or not to raise taxes to eliminate the budget deficit. I decided to sift through the Democratic and Republican national platforms for a firm grasp on the issue. I found several immature labels during the course of my reading, and consequently Jarrett's article caught my eye.

Sifting actually occurred only for the Democratic rhetoric. Republican rhetoric reads more easily. Labels, however, were abused by both parties. Democrats seem to believe that Reagan alone has caused every problem currently existing in the United States. Never mind the fact that he inherited a mess and faced stiff opposition from Tip O'Neil and the House. Terms frequently used included "Reagan's budget deficit" and "Reagan's trade debt." One would think the writers of the platform would realize the president has limited power due to the balance of the executive, legislative and judicial branches. Reagan doesn't control the world.

C. HEYWOOD REIDELL
Editorial Columnist

The Republican platform does not escape scrutiny either. In an effort to make Mondale appear weak and ineffective, the Republican platform repeatedly mentions the "Carter-Mondale" years of the past. Past is simply that. Fight Mondale as a presidential candidate and not as Carter's vice president.

The view each of these parties has of American government will bring more insight into why each intends to raise or not to raise taxes. Thus, I shall depart from making cheap shots and briefly outline the philosophies proposed by the Democratic and Republican platforms.

According to the Republican platform's first paragraph, 1984 voters must choose "between two diametrically opposed visions of what America should be." I'm sure the Democratic party will agree with this statement. I too believe the choices given by each platform are opposite in nature. The Democratic vision says, "Wealthier taxpayers will have to shoulder a greater share of the new tax burdens. Economic distortions must be eliminated." The Republican vision says, "The role of the federal government should be limited. We reaffirm our conviction that state and local governments closest to the people are the best and most efficient." The Democrats offer redistribution and increased regulation. The Republicans offer deregulation and decentralization.

I tend to embrace the Republican ideals. If the federal government's budget were smaller, the deficit problem would be reduced. Placing many of the responsibilities currently held by the federal government back in the hands of state and local governments would be a more efficient method of collecting and allocating funds for specific purposes. By reducing the size of government, expenditures would be reduced, and by transferring indispensable programs back to state and local authorities, the public will not suffer loss.

I disagree with the Democratic plan of raising taxes. After reading the economic portion of the platform, I came to the conclusion that the Democratic party leans toward a socialistic solution in the name of "fairness." In addition to playing Robin Hood with taxes, the platform calls for increased spending and increased government involvement with individual lives. This spending (investing) encompasses federally supported child care centers (1984 — Big Brother or what?), the arts, job training for dropouts and over-age 50 Americans, investing in infrastructures, housing and public transportation. I have two small questions to ask. How much will taxpayers be required to contribute to pay for both the existing deficit and the increased government spending? How can I believe the deficit can be reduced by two-thirds during a Mondale term in office?

I realize this column has been a brief outline. The scope of both platforms spans a wide range of topics. Hence, I constrained myself to the tax issue only. If you disbelieve my remarks, I urge you to read both platforms and then reread this column. I'd like to add the fact that since Reagan has been in office, the rate of increase of government spending has been reduced by two-thirds. Apparently the philosophy works.

Mr. Walker represents views and impressions of the Palestine Liberation Organization which are certainly narrow and simplistic. It is not surprising that he has formed such an opinion because the arms of Zionism reach into many dark and sultry places. A powerful Jewish-Zionist lobbying group has successfully reached the White House. Congress and media information. The media has especially manipulated the perception of the Arab people by portraying them as belligerent desert wanderers or as wealthy but crass oil mongers. The development and perpetuation of these myths have been successful in promoting and soliciting support for the objectives of Zionism and the undermining of any chances for a rational U.S. foreign policy in the Middle East. The PLO has been a prime target victim of such misrepresentation.

Consider that in 1917 there were less than 56,000 Jews living in Palestine. Arabs — Muslim and Christian — numbered 92 percent of the population. As a result of the abhorable persecution of European Jews by Hitler in Nazi Germany, hundreds of thousands of Jewish immigrants forced their way onto the lands of the indigenous people of Palestine to find refuge. These "refugees," backed militarily and financially by Zionist organizations, seized the land and properties of these indigenous Palestinian people in order to form their own racist Jewish state.

It is the Zionist organization and their methods and objectives to which we should truly direct our outrage and concern, not the PLO. Not only do Palestinians have rights as human beings, Mr. Walker, but they also have a right to self-determination in their homeland as a democratic, secular Palestinian state. The PLO is a legitimate international organization recognized by more than 100 countries and has been granted the status of Permanent Observer by the United Nations.

The PLO is a many-faceted organization. How often has the media shown us its health division, its new crescent, which provides comprehensive medical care to Palestinian men, women and children? There is a research center, self-supporting factories, orphanages, aid to widowed women and children and unions for teachers, doctors and engineers. These are all part of the PLO.

Traditionally, students have been the champion of oppressed people. The General Union of Palestinian Students should be commended for their courageous efforts to educate the university community. They should be commended for keeping their heritage and history alive. They should be commended for maintaining the fight for their homeland. It is our responsibility to question our own foreign policy so propelled by Zionist propaganda, which lends itself to our blind allegiance to Israel. The General Union of Palestinian Students deserve our attention and support.

Harriers ready to defend state cross country titles

Marlene Hale
Sports Writer

Both the State men's and women's cross country teams will be defending their team titles Thursday at Carter-Finley Stadium when they host the N.C. State Championships.

The women's race will get underway at 3:45 p.m., while the men's event starts at 4:30 p.m.

In the 36th running of the men's event, the Pack will be trying to out-duel the Wake Forest harriers in what is expected to be a two-team race.

"We expect to be running for first or second," said State coach Rollie Geiger. "It should be a two team battle (between State and Wake)."

In addition to the Deacons, the field is expected to contain over 140 runners from several in-state schools, including Brevard, North Carolina, UNC-Wilmington and Western Carolina.

Challenging the Pack's Jim Hickey, Andy Herr, Gavin Gaynor and Pat Piper for the individual title will be the Deacons' Steve Kartalia, Mike Palmer and Ron Rick. Both Rick and Palmer finished in the top 10 at the ACC Championships last year.

Another possible contender is Western Carolina's Robert Baker.

Geiger will count on his top four men in his team's bid to retain its state title.

"Our goal is to win back-to-back championships," said Geiger. "This is our first opportunity to see some familiar faces, and a win here could spring-board us into the ACCs (in two weeks)."

Also running for State will be Brad Albee, Paul Brim, Danny Murray and Ricky Wallace.

Freshman Kurt Seeber is still sidelined with a tendonitis injury.

While the men will face several worthy challengers, the nationally fourth-ranked women are expected to win with greater ease.

"We have won all five women's (championships)," Geiger said. "I expect to do that again. It boils down to Janet Smith, Connie Jo Robinson, Kathy Ormsby and Stacy Bilotta doing well. I expect those ladies to come through."

Women booters keep shutout skein intact

Tim Peeler
Sports Writer

Tired and experiencing somewhat of an emotional letdown, the women's soccer team returned from the WAGS' Tournament Monday with its unbeaten and unscored upon record intact.

State came out of the highly competitive tourney in Fairfax Va., this week end with one win and three scoreless ties to run its record to 7-0-3.

The Pack, ranked 17th nationally, opened the event Saturday afternoon by slipping past Texas, 1-0. Freshman Ingrid Lium scored State's only goal of the weekend on an assist from Krista Leap.

State's other three games against nationally third-ranked George Mason, Radford College and Virginia each ended 0-0.

The main concern of coach Larry Gross prior to the tournament was the injuries that plagued his team.

Freshman Kathy Walsh, an integral part to the Pack's high-scoring offense, was sidelined in all four games. Others, including Amy Gray and Beryl Bruffey, played with injuries.

Graduate assistant Chris Ogu, a former State all-

America, filled in for Gross, who was here coaching the men to victory against South Carolina.

Speaking for Ogu, Gross said he was pleased with the performance of the team without Walsh.

"We were definitely hurt by Walsh's absence" he said. "And with Beryl less than 100 percent, there was pressure on Ingrid to score. However, the others pulled together well."

Gross also expressed his gratitude to Ogu for the exceptional way he handled the team during Saturday's games.

According to Gross, after Saturday night's emotionally straining game against George Mason, State was somewhat flat for Sunday morning's early game with Radford. The game turned out to be a struggle of stingy defenses with neither relinquishing a goal.

By Sunday afternoon when it met Virginia, State felt the fatigue of playing four games in 24 hours. Although State handed the Cavaliers a 4-0 loss two weeks ago in Chapel Hill, weariness may have kept the Pack from duplicating that feat.

Gross cited the defensive work of the team as excellent. In 10 games the women have not allowed a goal.

The Pack now prepares to travel to Swannanoa, N.C., Saturday to face unfamiliar competition in Warren Wilson College. Walsh is expected to be back in action.

Senior Bill Swartz fired rounds of 72-73-71 to lead the men's golf team to a second-place finish in the 24-team MacGregor Invitational Tournament at Pickens, S.C., this weekend.

Swartz's 216 total placed him only two strokes off the individual best of 214.

The Pack recorded a three-round total of 883, including a tourney-best 286 on the final day. State trailed only team champion Georgia's 878 score. Duke placed third with a 887 total, while Georgia Tech and North Carolina tied for fourth at 890. Clemson, the tournament host, finished fifth at 891.

Sophomore Art Robeson shot rounds of 76-73-73 for a solid 222 total, and freshman Joe Gay carded a sparkling four-under-par 68 in the final round to finish at 223.

Gus Ulrich and Jeffrey Lankford each stroked to 229 totals for the Pack.

Pack coach Richard Sykes was pleased with his team's play and described the greens as being surprisingly fast — even faster than those on the professional tour.

State started its third tournament of the season today at the three-day State Intercollegiate Tournament at Buies Creek.

All things in moderation...especially alcohol.

That's good advice.

We're learning that moderation is the key to a safe and healthy life. We are each becoming more concerned with nutrition, exercise and overall physical fitness. That's why we're watching our salt intake, for example.

We know that there are certain safety lines and we don't cross them. Because excess means abuse and abuse means problems.

The majority of people who drink alcohol do so responsibly because they do so in moderation.

They know how to enjoy alcohol beverages and gain the social, personal and health benefits that come with responsible drinking.

They know the responsibility they take on when they drink alcohol beverages or serve these beverages to others...a responsibility for safety, health and proper conduct.

And they know the best way to practice that responsibility is through moderation.

By knowing their limits, and sticking to them.

By neither accepting, nor offering "one-for-the-road."

By neither condoning nor contributing to irresponsible behavior.

And by exhibiting at all times, a responsible attitude about alcohol.

They know the special responsibility that comes with the decision to drink alcohol...moderation.

That's the only way to drink...responsibly.

Spankers, Mustangs crack poll

Once again, the Rednecks 1 remained the top team in men's open play. The Rednecks had little chance of being dethroned, since only two of this week's top five teams played.

Noah-Vale continued to hold on to the second spot after being idle this week. The third team in the poll, the Heroes, got back on track beating APO 61-0 after squeaking past Segrams Seven last week.

This week's fourth team, Gold, did not play while the number five team, the Startowners, defeated A S M E 40-7. The Startowners' only defeat was an early-season loss to the Rednecks 1.

Last week's number eight team, the Tastebuds, moved up to sixth by virtue of their 58-0 rout of Metcalf.

Two teams cracked top 10 this week. The first is the Spankers, who held the number seven spot after defeating the Field Generals 27-7.

Dropping one notch this week is the Imposters, who fell to number eight. The Eliminators also dropped in this week's poll, falling from number six to number nine, even though they won by forfeit over DUL.

Rounding out this week's top 10 selections are the previously unranked Mustangs, who upped their record to 3-0 after beating ninth-ranked Navy ROTC 19-12.

Along with Navy ROTC, Air Force 1, 2, 2, dropped out of the top 10 after being ranked 10th last week.

In other games, the Deadcats defeated Delta Upsilon 14-13, while Hoze defeated the Losers 2, 7-12. Inter-Varsity defeated Phi Tau 36-18, while AICHE beat FCA 23-6.

The Geeks got into the win column with a 20-13 victory over TIA. Who Cares got past M 1 25-21, while the Emanous shutout the Riot Squad 20-0.

In Wednesday's action, Bored-Stiff finally got a win by upending Waddu Boys 14-6. The Raiders defeated the Cadurers 23-6, while the E-Team upset Segrams Seven 25-6.

Sigma Nu, SAM, DU and TKE all posted wins in the first night of fraternity bowling playoffs. They will now advance to the quarterfinals which will be held tonight at 9 p.m.

TKE edged Theta Chi 1771-1641 behind Mark Sieracki's 502 score.

SAM held only a five pin advantage after two games but pulled away for a 1783-1733 win over Theta Tau. Al Davis bowled a 531 to lead SAM while Randy Saunders had a total of 503 pins for Theta Tau.

DU defeated AGR 1756-1430 behind Robbie Atencio's 485 total to clinch the other quarterfinal berth.

Goalbusters win again

The Goalbusters improved their record to 4-0 with a 29-0 win over PR.

Debbie Williams threw two touchdown passes to Charles Blum and Frank Swindell ran for two touchdowns while William Beeker sparked a tough Goalbusters defense with two interceptions.

ASME upped their record to 3-1 with a 25-6 win over Talent Prevalis, while APO won their first game of the year by defeating AICHE 27-14.

J.B. Irving scored two touchdowns as the Warriors defeated Alpha Zeta and the Banana Cakes edged the Bruisers 16-14 on a safety. Chris Batts and Robbie Connery scored a touchdown each for the Banana Cakes, now 4-0.
