

National CR, CYD presidents debate on campus

Kathy Kyle
Staff Writer

The national president of College Young Democrats and the national president of College Republicans will debate their party's issues Sunday at 7:30 p.m. in the Student Center Ballroom.

State is one of 17 colleges nationally that is hosting a debate between College Young Democrats President Stephen Gersky from UCLA and College Republicans President Jack Abramoff from Georgetown University.

The debate is sponsored by Student Government and the Democratic and Republican clubs on campus. "The purpose of the debate is to focus attention on the issues affecting college students on the national level," Student Body President Shannon Carson said. Carson is the moderator for the debate.

"Hopefully the debate will increase student awareness of the issues and encourage them to get out and vote with these issues in mind," Carson added.

Various groups on and off campus have been asked to submit questions for the debate. These groups include: State's College Democrats Club, State's College Republicans Club, two North Carolina Student Legislature members, the governor of the N.C. Student Legislature, President of UNCASG, two State political science students, the student body president, and the editor-in-chief and news editor of Technician.

The audience at the debate will also be asked to submit questions during the debate which will be screened by Michael Parker, president of State's College Democrats club, and Dan Pope, president of State's College Republicans club. Six of these questions will be picked to be asked at the end of the debate, three by each club.

"We're expecting good representation by students from universities across the state," Carson said.

After the debate, a reception will be held in the North Gallery of the Student Center.

Committee finalizes plans for survey concerning minors

Kelly Rogers
Staff Writer

The Student Senate Academics Committee formulated questions Monday night for a survey to be administered to students concerning the institution of minor programs at the university.

The questionnaires will be given to students during the collection of pre-registration forms at Reynolds Coliseum on Monday, according to Voris Williams, committee chairman.

A minor is a secondary area of academic specialization, Williams said.

The committee plans to present a proposal concerning minor programs to the University Course and Curriculum Committee after obtaining student opinion on the programs.

Students will be asked to answer the following questions while standing in line at the coliseum Monday morning:

1. "Do you think NCSU should offer minor programs?"

2. "Would you personally pursue a minor program?"

3. "In what academic area would you pursue a minor?"

4. "Would you be willing to take additional courses to obtain a minor?"

5. "In what ways do you think a minor would benefit you personally?"

Minor programs will require the individual schools' deans' approvals and the provost's authorization to be made official, Williams continued.

"If schools are willing to accept minor programs, they should be awarded," he said.

"A minor program in engineering is not very feasible, but most other departments would have no trouble setting up a minor program."

A minor is often unrelated to a student's major and is designed to enhance career opportunities, he said.

The proposal will be presented to the University Course and Curriculum Committee and to the Student Senate on Nov. 14 for consideration.

South residents vent parking frustrations

Liz McCabe
Staff Writer

Many South Hall residents are unable to find parking spaces close to their dorm and are having to park as far away as the Bragaw parking lot.

Janis Rhodes, director of the transportation department, met with some of these students Tuesday night to discuss the issues of South Hall parking.

"This is our home," said Paula Rocha, resident advisor for South Hall. "Walking from Bragaw to South Hall at night is inconvenient and dangerous."

According to James Gann, facilities chairman for South Hall, what were once 20 resident spaces in front of South Hall (on Morrill Drive) were changed to commuter spaces at the beginning of the year, making the problem even worse.

"What I would like to suggest," Gann said, "is to change those spaces in front of South Hall back to resident spaces and convert some resident spaces at Bragaw to commuter spaces."

"Right now we have about 215 people at South Hall with resident permits, and there are only about 107 parking spaces," he said.

South Hall resident Mike Boone suggested that the spaces in front of South Hall on Morrill Drive be made available to both residents and commuters.

According to Rhodes, the parking spaces for dorms are allocated on the number of beds in the dorm and not on the number of students with cars.

"The number of parking spaces assigned for South Hall is on the same level as for all other halls — a 23% level of service," Rhodes said.

This poses a problem for the South Hall residents, Gann said. There are more upperclassmen; more residents have cars on campus. Out of 485 South Hall residents, 215 have cars.

"We're not disagreeing with you," Rhodes said, "but we have to be respectful of others' opinions too." She said other groups such as commuters would have to be given a chance to voice their opinion before a change could be made.

According to Rhodes, even if the change was approved, it would not go into effect until the beginning of next semester.

"A change in parking spaces requires approval from the University Board of Trustees," she said. "To go to that kind of vast change could mean a tremendous impact on public relations."

"We're talking about the possibility of someone getting assaulted," Gann said. "We should make the change at the expense of P.R."

"I would hate for someone to get raped before we got those spaces back," Rocha said.

"The parking spaces are not allocated as convenient as we would like them," Rhodes said. "We're juggling a limited resource, and we're trying to maintain a tremendous balance."

Democratic backers rally on brickyard; Republican supporters voice opposition

Ernest Seneca
Staff Writer

"Mondale... Mondale... Mondale..."

The chant echoed off the D.H. Hill Library and Harrelson Hall.

Tom Gilmore, chairman of the Democratic state-wide unity organization, said there is excitement in the air because the Democratic party is unified.

"I'm a Democrat and proud of it," Gilmore said, speaking to an enthusiastic crowd of supporters.

"We've got the best candidates, and we're going to win."

The College Democrats coordinated the rally on the brickyard Wednesday from 12 p.m. to 1 p.m. Guest speakers included Gilmore, Representative Don Blue, Betty Melain, Dave Edmisten and Al Adams. The speakers discussed the importance of voting and supporting the Democratic party this year.

Several Republican supporters voiced opposition by taunting the speakers and displaying political slogans on hand-held signs. One angered supporter wearing a Helmsbuster T-shirt grabbed a sign away from one of the hecklers and ripped it into pieces.

Michael Parker, president of the College Democrats, initiated the rally when he called for "some powerful yelling here" to let the Republicans know they can join the Democratic party after the election.

"The three most important problems facing our country now are the deficit, the lack of negotiations with the Soviet Union and the New Right with its Students for America organization on this campus," Parker said.

Tom Gilmore, the first speaker, said it is time to bring back the price of dangle (Helms) and send him into outer space instead of some teacher.

"You can't make a mistake voting the straight Democratic ticket," Gilmore said, "because we are the party that cares about the people, accomplishes the most things and is the party of fairness and youth. We offer hope by negotiating the weapons race to keep this world from being blown up, environmental conservation and educating this country's youth."

It is time to have a president who doesn't sleep during Cabinet meetings, he said.

"This is not an election about jellybeans and pen pals," Gilmore said, "but about toxic waste dumps and the cancer it causes in our children. This is not an election about country music and birthday cakes but about old people who can't afford to pay their hospital bills."

"This is not an election about the Olympic torch but about civil rights laws that opened the Olympics to women and minorities," he continued. "This is not an election about Reagan hecklers, but it's about Jerry Falwell picking members of the Supreme Court."

"Jim Hunt... Jim Hunt... Jim Hunt."

The chant erupted from the crowd as Gilmore finished his speech.

The next speaker, Don Blue, from the Mondale/Ferraro campaign, said he was glad to see the Republican supporters with their signs in the back because they really needed to know what's really going on in this country.

"They don't remember an America in the early 1960s where people were killed to vote," Blue said. "America did not have mixed audiences to even listen to me."

"This campaign is not an election about Reagan who wraps himself in the flag and makes you feel good about America, Blue said. Instead, it is the return of human rights to their rightful place, he said.

"It's important to you whether or not you're going to do your graduate work in Central America," Blue said to a boisterous reaction. "The real equal opportunity destroyer will occur when the nuclear weapon goes off."

Reagan and Helms believe that 90% of senior citizens are deadbeats and are destroying the social security system, Blue said.

"That's a lie," yelled one of the hecklers in the back of the crowd.

Reagan is not in control, Blue continued, for once a missile is out, it cannot be called back.

Two competing chants emerged simultaneously from the crowd as "Mondale... Mondale" and "Four more years... four more years" were voiced by the two groups present.

Betty McCain, from the Hunt campaign, said it is about time to have a State alumnus in the U.S. Senate.

"You would have the best care," she said with a wink of her eye. "Do ya'll remember Helms, the prince of darkness and other things that I call him in closer company, opposing the Martin Luther King holiday?"

A chorus of "boos" responded, to which she said that Helms has his own holiday at Halloween.

"You are the seedcorn of this Democracy to be the future leaders," she said. "I want you to vote for Jim Hunt because of economic reasons, his fairness and his positive leadership."

The Democratic supporters replied by chanting "Jim Hunt... Jim Hunt."

Michael Parker yelled, "Reagan! Bush, kiss my tush."

"That's a lot to kiss," remarked one of the Republican sympathizers.

Mike McGee, co-chairman of Students for Hunt on campus, asked the crowd what would happen to public schools and higher education if extremists like Jesse Helms have their way.

"Educational officials say between 20,000 and 40,000 college students would be forced to drop out," McGee said. "With Governor Hunt as our next U.S. senator we, as students, will know we have a friend in Washington."

McGee encouraged the Republican supporters to organize a rally and to do something positive.

Dave Edmisten, Rufus Edmisten's brother, said his opponent for governor, Jim Martin, would bankrupt the state if his tax proposals for lowering taxes were implemented.

"Rufus is not saying to raise taxes," D. Edmisten said, "but to make best of the taxes on the books and work with the legislators. Since legislators are predominately Democrats, Martin would be ineffective and legislature would be stalemated if he were elected."

Al Adams, from the Bob Jordan campaign, said that Republicans are always complaining about handouts.

"Two-thirds of North Carolina's budget goes to education," Adams said. "That's 66 cents on the dollar or $600 million a year."

"Six more days... six more days..." chanted the supporters about the upcoming election date as the crowd began to disperse.

"Contrary to belief," Parker concluded, "Students for America does not have a monopoly on students."

State offers course in Megatrends and Vocations

Class prepares students

Kelly Rogers
Staff Writer

It's here — the course for students of all majors.

A new course is being offered this spring which promises, according to Linda Dillon, assistant professor in occupational education, to prime students for the trends and advanced technology of the future.

The course is ED 296, Megatrends and Vocations, and will use the book Megatrends by John Naisbitt.

The book Megatrends is a best-seller which focuses on trends which begin in large cities and eventually spread to the entire nation.

"If you look at trends, you can make a decision for whatever you're doing," Dillon said.

She said that according to the book, our society is moving from forced-choice options to multiple-choice options in all areas of life.

"The class is a wonderful opportunity for students across campus to come in and learn about change and use change in their careers and lives," Dillon said.

The class will meet on Tuesdays and Thursdays from 11:05 to 12:20 and will have guest speakers each week to discuss such subjects as:

- institutional versus self-help
- the new multiple-choice society
- education for the future
- from a national to a world economy

Class discussions will be based on speeches. A mid-term and a final exam will determine grades.

Megatrends and Vocations will serve as an elective for students in all schools.

Interested students may contact Dillon in occupational education for additional information.

Hunt:

Governor favors federal help in many educational areas

Technician: Do you support government-guaranteed student loans and grants such as the National Direct Student Loans and Pell Grants for students' tuition expenses? Should such programs as these be expanded, reduced or maintained at the same level? In essence, what role do you think the federal government should play, if any, in aiding an individual student's payment of tuition to an institution of higher education?

Hunt: Unlike Senator Helms, who has consistently stated that he would abolish federal funding of education, I strongly support National Direct Student Loans, Pell Grants and other government-guaranteed student loans and grants at levels adequate to assure equal access to education opportunities for all Americans. Such student financial assistance should be available on the basis of financial need. There is a necessary and proper federal function in supporting these programs which help equalize access to education.

Q: Can private banks and industry provide the finances students need to pay college expenses? What role do you feel the private sector should assume in aiding prospective college students?

A: The private and public sectors must work together to see that those who need educational assistance receive it. I support encouraging partnerships in education between businesses, other private organizations and government. There is a clear national need for federal educational assistance programs.

Q: Do you feel that the Social Security education program is a necessary and useful program? What is your position on the maintenance or reduction of this program in terms of its relation to the total federal budget?

A: Cuts in Social Security student benefits enacted in the last two years will eventually eliminate financial aid for 750,000 college students. Those cuts were too deep. I support benefits to qualified young dependents of disabled and retired workers and students between the ages of 18 and 22 who are survivors of deceased workers (sometimes known as "student benefits").

Q: What do you see as some of the key issues in helping to insure college graduates a good supply of jobs when they leave school? As a senator, what can you do to help insure that jobs are available for these graduates?

A: The federal deficit is the most important issue facing our college graduates and our nation. The deficit must be reduced if we are to have sustained economic growth and assure our college graduates jobs. The United States government should have a balanced budget, and I support a constitutional amendment to require a balanced federal budget. I have proposed that the FY 1986 budget deficit be reduced in one year from the unacceptably high current level of about 5% of GNP to about 2.5% of GNP. This reduction will require FY 1986 spending cuts and tax loophole closings of between $80 and $100 billion, divided roughly evenly between spending cuts and tax reforms.

Q: Is the solvency of public colleges and universities a state or federal concern? What actions should the respective governments take in alleviating this problem?

A: When the solvency of our educational institutions is at stake, state and federal governments must act together to protect our national investment in higher education.

Q: The nation's colleges and universities, as well as the high schools, are experiencing a critical shortage of qualified instructors in the sciences. The so-called "brain drain" to private industry is being regarded as the main reason for the phenomenon. Is this a problem that the government should be involved with?

A: Yes. Government must become involved in the "brain drain" problems our schools are facing. Without talented teachers, we cannot hope to fully educate our students. The federal government can play an important role in providing incentives for talented students to enter the teaching profession, but the states must then pay the kind of salaries which will keep teachers in the classroom.

Q: What will you do to help prevent private colleges from encountering serious financial problems? Do you favor a tuition tax credit for students who attend a private college?

A: I support an educational system that includes strong public and private colleges — like the system we have now in North Carolina. I support the government-guaranteed student loans and grants described above and federal funding of basic research at institutions of higher learning — programs necessary to keep our system strong.

I oppose the tuition tax credits which have been proposed for elementary and secondary private school children. These tax credits amount to a federal subsidy of up to $300 to private school children — that is nearly twice what the federal government spends on public school children.

Q: The University of North Carolina system experienced an intense court battle recently over the desegregation of the university system. Do you favor federal intervention in such affairs?

Senate candidates answer questions

James Walker
Staff Writer

As has been stated many times this year, the race for the senate seat between Governor Jim Hunt and incumbent Senator Jesse Helms has shaped up to be one of the fiercest and most competitive races in the nation. It is also the most expensive senate race in history; over $20 million total has been spent by both the campaigns.

This election has been described as one in which the choices between different political and personal philosophies are among the most clear-cut offered in the nation. North Carolina's senate race is being watched by the world because of its national influence on the political direction of the nation, the South in particular.

In an effort to help students make an intelligent choice between Senator Helms and Governor Hunt, Technician asked each candidate 10 questions on the issue of education. Each candidate was asked the same questions. No other issues were covered in the interview for the sake of brevity and interest to the student body. Although all the issues are of importance, Technician decided to limit the questions asked to those pertaining to students' present educational environment.

Editor's note: Technician wishes to thank both candidates for taking the time to personally answer the questions we put to them. We also wish to thank all those involved in both campaigns: Claude Allen, press secretary for the Helms for Senate campaign; Jerry Lail, member of the press staff for the Helms for Senate campaign; Will Marshall, press secretary for the Jim Hunt Committee; and Smith Richardson, member of the Jim Hunt Committee staff.

A: I support desegregation of the university system, and I believe leaders at all levels should work together to provide equal access to a quality education for all students.

Q: Along the same lines, how do you feel about the practice of the federal government using money as a tool to bring about certain desired goals, such as denying federal funds to private institutions that they feel practice some form of discrimination? Are you in favor of requiring colleges and universities to identify students receiving federal tuition assistance that have not registered for the draft?

A: I strongly support racial justice. Racial justice includes both equal rights and civil rights, and I support the use of federal funds to assure equal access to a quality education for all students.

I support the law on draft registration as it now stands.

Q: Should the North Carolina Association of Educators be exempt from N.C. General Statute 95-98, the state law which makes public employees' union contracts void and unenforceable?

A: Question 10 involves a purely state issue which would not come before me if elected senator.

Helms:

Strong, growing economy key to solving nation's problems

Technician: Do you support the government-guaranteed student loans and grants such as the National Direct Student Loans and Pell Grants for students' tuition expenses? Should such programs as these be expanded, reduced or maintained at the same level? In essence, what role do you think the federal government should play, if any, in aiding an individual student's payment of tuition to an institution of higher education?

Helms: Without a doubt, government-guaranteed loans and direct educational grants have assisted many students and their families with funds necessary for college. However, with increasing pressure to reduce the national debt and balance the budget — which I fully support — we must begin looking to the private sector to play a more prominent role in educational lending.

Q: Can private banks and industry provide the finance students need to pay college expenses? What role do you feel the private sector should assume in aiding prospective college students?

A: Private lending institutions in our state continue to demonstrate their commitment to higher education. Since 1983, North Carolina banks have helped finance more than $238 million in student loans through the College Foundation. Already this year, the Foundation has financial commitments from banks in excess of expected loan needs. Public officials must continue to work with these institutions to develop innovative approaches for helping students cope with the escalating costs of education.

Q: Do you feel that the Social Security education program is a necessary and useful program? What is your position on the maintenance or reduction of this program in terms of its relation to the total federal budget?

A: I do not favor reductions in the Social Security education program.

Q: What do you see as some of the key issues in helping to insure college graduates a good supply of jobs when they leave school? As a senator, what can you do to help insure that jobs are available for these graduates?

A: Vigorous economic growth, spurred by lower taxes and reduced federal spending, offers students the greatest potential for securing jobs upon graduation. Because the vast majority of graduates seek employment in the private sector, the administration and Congress should pursue policies that encourage the free enterprise system to do what it does best — provide opportunity.

Q: Is the solvency of public colleges and universities a state or federal concern? What actions should the respective governments take in alleviating this problem?

A: The financial integrity of our state's colleges and universities is best dealt with by state and local officials. The General Assembly, along with the Board of Governors of the university system, understand our needs in North Carolina far better than a federal agency in Washington.

Q: The nation's colleges and universities, as well as the high schools, are experiencing a critical shortage of qualified instructors in the sciences. The so-called "brain drain" to private industry is being regarded as the main reason for the phenomenon. Is this a problem that the government should be involved with?

A: I see a distinct correlation between teachers' pay and the supply of highly qualified professors and high school teachers. As long as there is a disparity between educational salaries and wages offered by private industry, many of our most qualified instructors will continue opting for jobs outside the school system. Teachers' salaries are and should be a direct responsibility of state governments.

Q: What will you do to help prevent private colleges from encountering serious financial problems? Do you favor a tuition tax credit for students who attend a private college?

A: The best thing Congress can do for the colleges in this country, public and private, is to assure a strong and growing economy to provide productive jobs for college graduates and to provide the wherewithal for continued operation of institutions of higher learning. To have a strong and growing economy, Congress must limit the amount of tax it takes from the American taxpayer and curtail federal spending in Washington. This will keep interest rates low so students who have to borrow money for college can afford it.

Q: President Reagan and I support tuition tax credits for the parents of elementary and secondary school students. I would support the same for college students as well. I support these credits because parents whose children attend private schools should have tax relief in recognition of the costs they save the government by educating their children in private schools. Also, tuition tax credits foster competition between public and private schools, which leads to better quality education and better educated students.

Q: The University of North Carolina system experienced an intense court battle recently over the desegregation of the university system. Do you favor federal intervention in such affairs?

A: The UNC desegregation case is a classic example of harassment of a state institution by federal bureaucrats. Apparently, Joe Califano made harassment of UNC a personal crusade, and he went after UNC with the same kind of attitude that he attacked our tobacco farmers.

Q: Between the time President Reagan was elected and the day he took office, I visited with him at Blair House in Washington. After we talked about old times, he asked me to list my chief concerns that I would appreciate his help on as president. I listed, in no particular order, the textile industry, the tobacco industry and the UNC desegregation case.

Soon after President Reagan was inaugurated, he instructed Secretary Bell to meet with President Friday, Senator East and myself. That was the beginning of the end of that case, and presently an agreement was reached and the suit settled.

The taxpayers of North Carolina have spent over $100 million to defend themselves from their own government in Washington, according to UNC President Bill Friday. This waste would not have been necessary had not federal bureaucrats in Washington been overzealous.

Q: Along the same lines, how do you feel about the practice of the federal government using money as a tool to bring about certain desired goals, such as denying federal funds to private institutions that they feel practice some form of discrimination? Are you in favor of requiring colleges and universities to identify students receiving federal tuition assistance that have not registered for the draft?

A: In general, I believe the federal government is spending too much money, borrowing too much money and wasting too much money. Therefore, my first priority regarding federal spending is to cut it as much as possible without harm to the truly needy. I have proposed cutting federal spending 10% across-the-board with the exception of national defense, Social Security and Medicare. Under my proposal, Congress would set the priorities for cuts in various programs — some programs might be cut drastically, others not at all, but the net effect would be a 10% reduction in federal spending and a reduction in the deficit.

When the federal government does fund certain activities, I believe Congress has the right to impose conditions, including nondiscrimination. But I also believe any such condition must be reasonable and fair, and federal enforcement should never be burdensome or create havoc for the recipient.

Almost all these principles were violated in the UNC desegregation case which, according to UNC President Bill Friday, cost North Carolina over $100 million despite the fact that no judicial finding of racial discrimination was ever made.

As to the draft matter, I don't think it is asking too much for students receiving federal assistance to comply with the draft regulations, nor do I have problems with the colleges helping in this regard. None of us would enjoy the freedoms and opportunities we have in this great country if disobeying the law became the rule instead of the exception.

Q: Should the North Carolina Association of Educators be exempt from N.C. General Statute 95-98, the state law which makes public employees' union contracts void and unenforceable?

A: No, I support the current law.

Campaigns end, citizens relax

All those that do not live and die by politics and have already made up their minds about the election next Tuesday certainly should be waiting with anticipation the end of this campaign year. Anticipation of peace and calm and of clean air to breathe, not polluted with lies and misrepresentations.

Not until the Jim Hunt-Jesse Helms race is completed will the state again have peace. It has been a full-fledged war the past several months, with both camps launching final offensives this week to try to swing the election in their favor.

We hope that this election has had several traits that will be considered unique to this election in future years.

One of these traits is money spent. Spending $22 million on a senatorial election is ridiculous. Much of the money was spent simply to throw mud at the opposition, something that has no place in North Carolina.

Another is the excessive negative campaigning. Both candidates have gone overboard telling the voters why they should not vote for the opposition, but little as to why he should vote for a certain candidate. Hunt has done some positive advertising and says that his negative advertising was only done in response to Helms'. He says it was necessary to remain in contention in this election.

This may be true, but it does not excuse the general tone of this election, including that of Hunt.

Importance illustrated

There are some good things that can come out of this election. One good thing is Gov. Jim Hunt's and Sen. Jesse Helms' attitudes and cooperation in answering Technician's answers on education for today's paper.

Although both candidates are extremely busy, they and their campaign staffs took the time to review our questions and answer them.

We thank both candidates and their staffs for taking the time to do this when we know they have been too busy to answer all questions put to them this fall.

Many voters are undoubtedly voting more against one candidate than for another. It's turned out to be a race between the anti-Hunt forces and the anti-Helms forces. This is truly an example of a democracy. Ha.

The philosophy of negative campaigning is that it is the quickest and most effective way of overcoming an opponent's lead or popularity. Before the election, Hunt was well ahead in the polls and generally commanded much respect across the state. But after the campaign, Hunt is deadlocked with Helms and has lost much respect.

The same goes for Helms. Hunt's ads have portrayed him as an ally of murderers and millionaires, hardly the image a representative of the people of North Carolina should have.

This type of advertising does no one good. It leaves the state with a poor reputation, it leaves the voters with a bad attitude about elections, and it insults the intelligence of the electorate. Certainly the average voter is intelligent enough to make a choice between two candidates based on what they stand for and who the voter feels represents him best.

Some would argue that negative campaigning simply points out what a candidate really represents and therefore gives the voter a better picture of the opposing candidate. However, most of the material brought forth is either false or a misrepresentation.

Let's hope the state is not subjected to such a campaign again in the future.

America is just goin' to pot. That's what 'em damn hippie Democrats are puttin' up their noses, ain't it? We don't like it. And every God-fearin' red-blooded American shouldn't like it neither.

This country needs to be strong. We need to kick a little commie ass to show the world who's in charge!

We oughter start with Nicaragua. Thank goodness that we have the Central Intelligence of America (heretofore known as the CI of A) down there, showin' 'em what American democracy is. Democracy is minin' harbours, assassinatn' undesirables and and blowin' 'em up things real good!

The problem is 'em spics don't understand what real democracy means like what we do. You have to force it on them for their own good. They don't know what's good for 'em, but we do.

She don't have the right type of equipment, if you know what we mean, to be vice president.

Spics ain't the only ones that need to be straightened out about democracy, American democracy, that is... without Democrats.

Blacks, browns, reds, yellors and Democrats... they all don't understand that some people are just a little bit more equal than others.

What this country needs is strong leaders to tell these people what to do. Ron Reagan knows this. So does Jesse. They're good buddies, you know. North Carolina needs 'em. The nation needs 'em. God needs 'em.

There are just too many people complainin' about the government and puttin' America down. We say they ought to be taken out back an' kicked in the head awhile until they understand what's good for 'em. We're not violent men, but it's helpin' 'em.

We went to a Desayin', "Dumb rednecks for Helms." We asked him, "Are you implyin' that we's dumb?"

He gave us some smart ass, New York commie answer. So, we took him out back. We learned him a lesson in civics. Yep.

The freedom of speech is all right, but something has to be done about these commie smart asses. They're always whinin' and vacillatin' and demagoguain'. It can make a real man sick.

Speakin' of real men, a real man wouldn't let a New York, liberal hussie run for the honorable job of vice president. She don't have the right type of equipment, if you know what we mean, to be vice president. She can't even keep her taxes straight. Isn't that just like a woman? They just don't understand business. How can a second-class citizen run a country? She oughter be home makin' babies, not government policy. Mondale and that there l'il gal can't keep America strong. He's a limp wimp, and she's from New York.

If that ain't bad enough, Jimmy Hunt wants to be our senator. Did you know that he has queer friends, and he's prob'ly a l'il funny, too? And we don't mean hee, haw funny, neither. We read it in the Landmark.

Folks, you gotta realize that this ain't no game. It's dog eat Democrat world... heh. It's about time we broke out our chainsaws an' learned alot of people alot of things about America. If'n you see anybody criticizin', complainin' or promisin' money to no-goods — slap 'em silly or just kick 'em in the head for awhile. They'll thank ya fer it later.

Politics, laws need morality

C. HEYWARD RIEDELL

Editorial Columnist

You can't legislate morality? I wonder who thought up this wonderful phrase. I like it. Forget about DWI or DUI laws, homicide laws or rape statutes. People must realize these laws don't really pertain to moral questions. They are better filled under the category of social ethics.

If we can just propagate the concept that government the lawmaker is actually government the provider, we can eliminate God's role from the minds of America. After government is seen as the benevolent hand in times of trouble, lawmaking will rightfully become a system of values clarification and not an enforcement of right over wrong.

Murder is definitely wrong. No one would dispute this fact, except maybe Charles Manson. However, if we could only change the perspective. Let's emphasize the needs of a mother. Surely they'll forget about right or wrong and concentrate on the value of convenience. Or even better. Let's take their minds off of murder by playing on their sympathy.

What if a child is born retarded, blind or has Down's syndrome? They'd be certain to have pity on the child and let it die. Think of the poor quality of life the child would have. Who will disagree that a child is better off not being born into an obviously unhappy life or a fatherless family perhaps?

The preceding scenario makes a person step back a minute and contemplate religion, morality and politics. Just where in the political rulebook does it say don't mix religion and politics? If one thinks about the subject intently, how can religion and politics be separated without abolishing both? Politics is an outgrowth of religion.

The words "separation of church and state" do not find their origin alongside the wisdom found within our Constitution. The phrase came from a personal letter written by Thomas Jefferson. There is no constitutional guarantee preventing religion from influencing the political spectrum.

In actuality, the First Amendment protects religion from government, not the often misinterpreted other way around. The amendment states, "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." The word "religion" is a key to the proper interpretation.

There was not a wide range of religious belief in early America. Any difference was mainly denominational in the Christian church (i.e. Baptist, Methodist, Episcopalian). Congress was specifically not to establish one denomination of the Christian church as the Church of America. There was no other major "religion" to contend with.

Incidentally, I doubt if one could honestly accuse the moral majority or any other Christian political group of planning a fundamentalist Church of the U.S. propagated by the federal government. A dictated centralized church is not biblical. Never were religious views to be extruded from politics. If this were not the case, why would the Continental Congress hypocritically call colony-wide days of fasting and prayer? The answer is Christianity is voluntary, not mandated. In addition, the Northwest Ordinance of 1787, which set aside federal land for public schools, states: "Religion, morality and knowledge being necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind, schools and the means of learning shall forever be encouraged." This ordinance was passed again in 1789. The same Congress that drafted the good ole Constitution. Were they double minded?

So how does this article relate to the 1984 presidential election? I see two clearly opposite views in regard to religion and politics. No, Ronald Reagan is not a perfect man; however, he does stand for many of the religious views on the issues. Walter Mondale, supported by the ACLU, still reads between the lines in the First Amendment. I support Ronald Reagan because he sees the erosion of biblical influence that has taken place in this country and wishes to restore the freedom the church once had and to reverse the so-called ethical laws.

When laws are enforced for value judgments or relative worths as opposed to right over wrong, lawmakers enter a precarious situation. I was once informed that everything Hitler did was legal. But everything he did was not right. When we lose religious perspective and influence, how do those few in authority decide right from wrong?

Euthanasia has value, but it's not right. Infanticide appears sympathetic, but it too is wrong. Killing our babies for convenience and cosmetics has value, but religion tells me murder is wrong. No, women don't have a right to choose whether or not to extinguish a life. Does anyone else in our society have a right to terminate innocent life? Nov. 6? Forget homework, I'm watching the election.

Threats in letter not Christ-like

We are writing this in response to the Oct. 31 letter by David Engle. We are all Christians, and we wish to extend our sincere apologies for the letter he received from someone claiming to be a Christian. A Christian is not someone who goes to church, though most Christians do. A Christian is someone who has asked Jesus Christ to come into his/her heart and change him/her. From then on this person has a personal relationship with Christ. The Bible tells us, and Jesus reminds us, "They'll know you are Christians by your love."

We are hurt by the act of hate carried out against Mr. Engle and pray that the perpetrator will examine his actions and decide, "Would Jesus want me to act this way?"

Finally, we wish to apologize again to Mr. Engle. It is unfortunate that a few people claiming to be Christians and acting in an un-Christlike manner give people the wrong impression of a Christian. We are sorry this happened to you.

Game of year: State vs. Duke

Deron Johnson
Sports Writer

The biggest soccer game in North Carolina this year takes place Sunday at Method Road Stadium when the men's soccer team takes on Duke. The highly billed ACC confrontation kicks off at 2 p.m.

The nationally seventh-ranked Wolfpack will be seeking revenge against the Blue Devils, ranked 18th, for a couple of one-point losses last year in Durham. The second game was a controversial, 2-1 Blue Devil victory in a playoff game that featured both physical play and verbal altercations between the two head coaches.

The Blue Devils are accustomed to being one of the nation's best teams with a second-place finish in 1982 and ninth in 1983 after being ranked number one most of the season. This year Duke, 12-3-3 overall and 2-1-1 in the conference, is dented after losing six starters to graduation.

"I really don't feel that Duke is in a rebuilding process," State coach Larry Gross said. "Most of the starters shared a lot of playing time with underclassmen, and really they have more experienced people coming back than we do because we start four freshmen, four sophomores, one junior and only two seniors. And they had a great recruiting year."

To stop the Blue Devils, Gross said, State would have to contain the team's three leading scorers, including all-America junior Tom Kain (11 goals), sophomore John Kerr (six goals) and freshman Tom Stone (six goals).

The Pack, 12-2-1 overall and 2-1 in the ACC, is coming off an impressive 4-1 victory over North Carolina Sunday in Chapel Hill. A win could go far in aiding State's NCAA playoff hopes.

The Pack already has beaten several teams that may figure into the NCAA balloting including South Carolina (3-1), Appalachian State (6-2) and Campbell (6-0).

"I think this is one of three big games in a row that we have coming up which will determine if we're in the NCAAs and where we are going to play," Gross said. As for Duke, a loss might knock the team out of the playoffs for the first time since 1978.

"We almost have to win to make the playoffs," Duke coach John Rennie said. "We have to play good defense against State because they are the most explosive offensive team we've faced this year, and our team has given up a lot of goals this year."

Rennie added that for Duke to win, his team would have to stop senior all-America and the ACC's all-time leading scorer Sam Okpodu, Okpodu broke the record (formerly held by Clemson's Nnamdi Nwokoche who played from 1978-82) for goals scored in a career with 76 Sunday against UNC.

"We have to stop Okpodu not only for his scoring but because of his excellent and unselfish passing abilities, too," Rennie said.

One key element that will be missing in State's passing game is team captain Sam Owoh. Owoh suffered a first-degree sprain of both his ankle and knee in a 3-0 victory over Florida International in the Clemson Tournament on October 19 and will not see action Sunday, according to Gross.

"Duke's always a strong team, and we'll have a tough game — probably a one-goal game," Gross said. "But I think our kids will really be up for this one."

For obvious reasons the Wolfpack will be up for the Blue Devils, since there is a natural rivalry between the two teams. A couple of Pack players gave their thoughts on the match.

"I went there on a recruiting trip last year and didn't like it at all," freshman midfielder Tab Ramos said. "I decided wherever I went to school that we would beat Duke, and we will."

"They beat us in our last two games last year," said Okpodu. "This is my last chance to pay them back. I think we owe them — and by beating them it will help us get in the playoffs."

Playing at home, where State is 9-0 in its new soccer stadium, should give the Pack an advantage.

"I think what could make a big difference is for our student body to be at the game," Gross said.

Will Gamecocks be jinxed?

Scott Keeper
Sports Editor

Every true sports fans is well aware of the Sports Illustrated "cover" jinx. You know, SI features the nation's hottest team on the cover, then the very next time that it takes the field it represents the epitome of ineptitude.

The jinx is well documented, and its believers are quite large in number. But, can that same jinx carry over to merely the magazine's innards? Wolfpack fans must certainly hope so.

This week's SI contains a feature story on unbeaten and nationally fifth-ranked South Carolina. The Gamecocks fly into town for a 1 p.m. interstate clash with Tom Reed's struggling 3-5 Wolfpack Saturday at Carter-Finley Stadium. And everyone surely recalls what happened the last time State challenged a ranked opponent deserved of SI attention.

Yes, one month ago, the feature team was Georgia Tech's upstart Jackets. (Final: State 27, Tech 22). It's a safe bet that everyone in the Wolfpack's camp would jump at the chance to savor a similar result this time around — especially in light of what has transpired in the month since.

In particular, the past couple of weeks are certain to go down as two of the most soul-searching in Reed's 18-year career.

The initial pains occurred in Chapel Hill two Saturdays ago, when Reed and his snakebitten Wolfpack were forced to swallow a last-minute 28-21 defeat at the hands of ultra-rival North Carolina.

Last week, Clemson's indomitable Tigers stalked into West Raleigh and continued the Pack's frustration by claiming a 35-34 decision.

"We've had two tough weeks of adversity, but if you can't handle two weeks of adversity in your life, then you're going to be in big trouble," Reed said during his Monday afternoon press conference. "We need to come back out and try as hard as we can, because you set trends for yourself as a man and how you will conduct yourself when faced with adversity."

The Wolfpack will have plenty of adversity to confront when it steps on the field with coach Joe Morrison's Gamecocks. Using a highly effective split-back veer offense, the Gamecocks are off to their best start ever — 7-0 — and boast a scoring average of 35.4 points per outing.

Defensively, the 'Cocks possess a swarming, hard-hitting unit appropriately dubbed "The Fire Ants."

"They're not quite as big as some teams we've faced," Reed said. "But they've got speed and quickness. They make you work for everything you get."

But according to Reed, the real secret to South Carolina's success lies in their ability to blend their various talents so well.

"The big part of their story you have to actually

Foreign recruiting fuels intensity

Deron Johnson
Sports Writer

Many State-Duke confrontations on the soccer field become highly physical, and last year's NCAA playoff clash was no exception.

During the game, a 2-1 Blue Devil win, Pack coach Larry Gross and Duke mentor John Rennie were involved in a midfield confrontation after Pack striker Chris Ogu was red-carded and ejected from the contest for allegedly fouling and injuring the Blue Devils' John Kerr. The referee had reversed his ruling to give Duke a corner kick and instead threw Ogu out of the game.

Rennie proceeded to verbally assault the State striker, saying that Ogu had intentionally committed the foul, when Gross came over to protect his player. With only 10 players which contributed to the one-point loss.

One of the reasons that this rivalry is so intense is due to the two coaches' approach to recruiting foreign athletes. Rennie has complained in the past couple of years about the number of foreign players competing for State, of whom he said two were the reason (because of their dirty play, according to Rennie) for the animosity between the two clubs.

"The two players who have been a problem, resulting in injury to some of our players in the past, are gone now and there should not be a problem now," Rennie said in a telephone interview Tuesday.

When questioned about his views on foreign athletes, Rennie said that he believed a few could be good for a team, but a majority of the team being from another country could be detrimental to the involvement of the American players.

"One or two foreign players on a team can help the American players develop, but when there are a number of foreign athletes the American players end up just feeding the ball to them," Rennie said. "I think (see 'State,' page 7) see to understand," Reed said. "And that is the chemistry and cohesiveness they have. That is what makes them such a great team right now."

Esposito and teammates will have to eliminate untimely turnovers if they hope to upend the Gamecocks.

"When you can have an off-day on a cold, miserable rainy afternoon in South Bend, Ind., and come from behind and beat Notre Dame, I'd say you're a pretty good team — I don't care who you are."

Morrison substitutes freely between quarterbacks Allen Mitchell (581 yards, five touchdowns) and Mike Hold (574 yards, five scores). Junior runningback Kent Hagood is the team's leading rusher with 440 total yards (7.1 yds. per rush).

Minus senior tailback Joe McIntosh, the Pack offense will rely on able backups Vince Evans and Joe Greene. McIntosh suffered an arch injury to his foot in the first quarter of the Clemson clash and is out indefinitely.

"Joe's a great football player, and we're going to miss him," Reed said. "He always comes to play. It's really a shame for the young man, especially with this being his senior year."

The Pack will need another strong performance — without costly interceptions — from quarterback Tim Esposito.

Esposito, who threw for 203 yards against the Tigers, stands a good chance of breaking a pair of Wolfpack passing marks Saturday. With nine touchdown passes to his credit this season, Esposito is only one away from assuming the top position, while the senior signal-caller needs just 11 completions to move past former State great Dave Bucky's first-place 307 career strikes.

Pigskin Picks

The Pack's missing link may have been discovered. All this time, we superstitiously thought Tom Suiter's vote against State was a ticket to victory. But since the Wolfpack has faltered in its last two outings (which Suiter both picked correctly), the panel has aborted that idea. Now, in a surprise move, Ron Colbert has jumped on the Pack bandwagon, predicting a West Raleigh chicken pickin' Saturday evening.

"Tom's fellows will win this week, doo dah, doo dah. Cocks are due, but so is State, oh-h-h da doo dah day," Colbert sang out as he strutted back to the studio.

Colbert, who hasn't picked State since the second game of the year, and Will Grimes both have the best record in the Wolfpack's games, checking in with 5-3 marks. Let's hope that after this week, "Crunch" is 6-3 and "Loyal" Will is 5-4. If the reverse occurs, Mr. Grimes will be forced-fate State victory pick.

Five regular panelists and this week's guest, ultra-successful Pack swimming coach Don Easterling, agree that South Carolina's Gamecocks will finally be cooped. That has been the general impression among State students this week, too.

Colbert finds it much easier opting for his alma mater than the Wolfpack and picked the Cavaliers to shock the highly-ranked Mountaineers. In another upset, Grimey (13-6-1) communistically chose the bowl-minded (chuckle) Tar Heels to upset league-leading Maryland.

In the water polo game of the week, the Coast Guard ventures into Merchant Marine's waters. Sports Editor Scott Keeper and Poulton both agreed that the Merchants will catch the Coast with its guard down.

After a short-lived stint at the top, Colbert (12-7-1 for the week) slipped a game behind long-time leader Bruce Poulton (13-6-1). Tying the Chancellor for the week were Suiter and Grimes.

Meanwhile, in the echelon of also-rans, Todd McGee flipped his way to a respectable 12-7-1 mark, but remained in last place overall.

Sports Editor Scott Keeper compiled a 11-8-1 mark for the week, barely edging Executive Sports Editor Devin Steele (10-9-1) and guest Ken "The Duke" Melley (10-9-1).

State hosts Duke

it's good that State has started to get away from that year.

Gross said he has never understood Rennie's reasoning on foreign players because "he has recruited many of the foreign players we have had here. Also he had what was mostly a foreign team when he coached at Columbia."

In addition, Gross pointed out that the Wolfpack has only one less foreign player (three) than last year. That does not seem like it should make such a drastic difference in the team as Rennie insinuates, Gross said.

"I just concern myself with my own team and don't throw rocks or arrows at anyone else's program," Gross said. "But I do think the Duke program is one of the best in the country."

"Most of the engineers I graduated with probably wound up as an assistant engineer to somebody else. Maybe doing the details for somebody else's design or supervising some small aspect of construction.
But my first year as an Engineer Lt., I've designed many of my own projects and supervised the construction on everything from baseball dugouts to the concrete work on a dam. Earthmoving, grading, filling, paving, concrete work, masonry - you name it, I've supervised it.
Whether I stay in the Army or go into civilian construction work later, I've got experience that some engineers won't have when they're 30!
More than supervising construction, I've learned how to manage people. I've got 40 right now I have to plan for and see to in terms of a myriad of details of their lives."
What I learned in Army ROTC about leadership and management, I've put to good use.
Army ROTC got Frank Quackenbush off to a good start in his field. It can do the same for you whether you're a civil engineer or an English major. # Men cagers open Sunday in Red-White

From Staff Reports

Coches Jim Valvano un-masks his 1984-85 State basketball team to the general public Sunday when the Wolfpack stages the first of two Red-White intrasquad games that it will play before starting regular-season competition later in the month.

Tip-off time Sunday is 7 p.m. in Reynolds Coliseum. State students will be admitted with a registration card and picture I.D. Tickets are $3 for adults and $1 for non-State students.

The second Red-White outing will be held Nov. 14 at Cumberland County Memorial Arena.

"Red-White games are a lot of fun," said Valvano. "It gives the fans the opportunity to see the veterans in action again and also allows them to take a peek at the newcomers."

Valvano plans to divide his 14-man squad into two camps to start the contest, but will then switch players from one team to the other for experimental reasons.

"We probably won't split up the squad until maybe the day before," said Valvano. "Even then, they won't stay the same because we need to try various combinations."

Lorenzo Charles and Terry Gannon, a pair of seniors, led the Wolfpack in scoring on its recent visit to Greece, a trip that saw the Pack win three and lose one.

"We still need a lot of work," Valvano said upon the team's return.

Newcomers on the Pack roster include 6-11 Chris Washburn, 6-7 John Thompson, 6-5 Nate McMillan, 6-1 Quentin Jackson and 6-3 Vinnie Del Negro.

Terry Gannon, one of the scoring leaders in the Pack's recent games in Greece, will show his stuff once again in the intrasquad scrimmage.

Spikers blow lead, game to Tar Heels

Todd McGee
Sports Writer

The volleyball team will be looking to rebound from a disappointing loss to North Carolina Tuesday night when it hosts Georgia Tech tonight in Carmichael Gym. Game time is at 7:30.

The Pack also entertains Virginia Saturday night at 7:00.

"We're not expecting too much from Georgia Tech, but I am expecting a lot out of Virginia," Pack coach Judy Martino said. "They are a scrappy team, and they have nothing to lose."

Against the Tar Heels in Chapel Hill, the Pack took the first two games fairly easily, 15-7, 15-9, and held a commanding 9-1 lead in the third game before succumbing. Carolina took the last three games 15-11, 15-5, 15-7.

Martino cited poor serving, in particular, in the crucial third game as contributing to the Wolf-pack's downfall.

"I think what brought us down a little was that we missed 20 serves, (including seven in the third game)," she said. "Against a good team, you can't miss that many serves (and expect to win)."

"The first two games were very exciting," Martino continued. "We passed well and hit well. It looked like we might have let up a little after that. They started playing well and at the same time we just didn't play up to par. The momentum swung to them and they kept it."

"You can't take anything away from Carolina. They played well. They have some good hitters and a big block. That was probably the best they've played this year."

Martino said she would not let one loss temper her feelings towards her team.

"We're still doing some very good things," she said. "I do believe we have a good team. We just need to get back on track. We're not out of it by any means."
