

Senate approves funds for new student legal advisor

Kathy Kyle
Staff Writer

Funding for a new student legal advisor was approved by acclamation by the Student Senate Thursday night.

An attorney will be hired on a part-time basis to advise only students on legal problems.

The present legal advisor, Sonja Beckham, is paid by the division of student affairs and provides legal advice not only to students and student organizations but also to the university.

"The number of cases has grown so much that it has begun to restrict the number of cases she (Beckham) could handle," Shannon Carson, student body president, said, explaining the need for the new advisor.

The program will cost approximately $4,000 to start, according to Carson, who said a student advisory board will immediately begin looking for a lawyer to fill the position.

The Senate approved funding for several campus clubs and organizations.

An additional $3,200 was allocated to Sport's Club Authority, which has already received $2,000 this year from the Senate.

Although the Finance Committee recommended an allocation of $2,000, the full Senate voted to raise the amount of $1,200 to a total of $3,200.

According to Student Body Treasurer Gary Mauney, the additional funding for the Sports Club Authority had nothing to do with Carson's veto of the controversial Ski Club bill which had been approved for $1,268.

In other business, the Society of Automotive Engineers was appropriated $1,034.85 for materials to build a car to enter in the Mini Baja Competition.

The Native American Student Association was granted $764 to attend a state-wide Indian Conference in Fayetteville and to buy basic necessities for the club.

Political science major Scott Bowling was given $75 to fund half of his air fare to a West Point Conference on United States affairs he attended in November.

TEMPS. State's trained emergency medical personnel, were given $600 to replace used equipment and maintain present equipment.

The Recreation Internship Summer employment conference was given $360 to help pay for administrative costs for this year's conference.

The Senate also approved the following spring election dates:

Books open: Feb. 25, 8 a.m.
Books close: March 1, 5 p.m.
All Candidates Meeting: March 11
Elections: March 20-21
Runoffs: March 25-26
2nd Runoffs: March 28
Installation: April 10

The sites of the voting polls will be announced later. The next Senate meeting will be held Wednesday, Jan. 30, at 7 p.m.

Financial Aid Office holds informational meeting today

Financial aid information and applications for the 1985-86 school year will be available at meetings scheduled in Stewart Theatre today, Tuesday and Wednesday by the University Financial Aid Office.

A student needs to attend only one of the meetings, but several meetings are scheduled to allow students to attend at convenient times.

The following meeting times are scheduled:

- Today, Jan. 21 - 4 p.m.
- Tuesday, Jan. 22 - 4 p.m.
- Wednesday, Jan. 23 - 7 p.m.

The Financial Aid Forms and any additional materials needed for applying for aid will be distributed.

Types of aid for which a student may be considered if the Financial Aid Form is filed are:

- Gift Assistance: This includes general university scholarships, grants and various "name" or special scholarships; the federally funded Pell Grant and Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grant (SEOG); and the State Student Incentive Grant.
- Loans: These include university loans and the National Direct Student Loan. Separate applications must be filed with lenders by those applying for the Guaranteed Student Loan.
- College Work-Study: This award provides the student with an opportunity to work. Wages are paid for the actual hours worked. Checks are received bi-weekly.

The Financial Aid Office anticipates that the need and demand for aid funds will be larger in 1985-86 than in previous years and recommends that accurate aid applications be filed promptly so that the application may reach the university while funds are still available.

Cashier reminds students of important dates this week

The University Cashier and Student Accounts Office reminds students of the following dates for the spring semester:

The last day to withdraw or drop courses with a refund or reduction in tuition is Wednesday. The tuition charge is based on the official number of hours and courses carried as of 5 p.m. this day.

Upon adding course work that results in an increased fee, students should present the official add form and pay at 2 Peele Hall. Refunds resulting from courses dropped can be obtained by presenting the official drop form at 2 Peele Hall. The tuition charge is based on the official number of hours and courses carried at 5 p.m. on Wednesday.

Students receiving financial aid for the 1985 spring semester who have not signed their Financial Aid Authorization Forms should do so immediately at the Cashier's Office, Room 2, Peele Hall. Recipients are required to sign the authorization form before the financial aid funds can be applied to their educational expenses or disbursed to them.

Authorization forms must be signed each semester immediately after registration since failure to do so may result in the cancellation of financial aid with funds being returned to the sponsoring account or agency. The Cashier's Office hours are 8:30 a.m. to 3 p.m. weekdays.

Students enrolled in courses requiring computing facilities and software, a laboratory or a project experience must pay a course fee to partially offset the cost of necessary equipment and operation. The course fee will not exceed $30 per semester and will be assessed for courses officially carried at 5 p.m. on Wednesday. Students who have any questions concerning these procedures and dates should call 737-2986.

Faculty, students discuss H&SS suggestions

Mark Bumgardner
Staff Writer

Cameramen, reporters and a crowd of over 200 filled the Student Center Ballroom Thursday to discuss the interim report recently released by the Commission on Humanities and Social Sciences.

The report, made public last week, supplies suggestions for an improved, well-rounded undergraduate curriculum.

Robert Bryan, committee member, used the abortion question to illustrate the committee's push for interdisciplinary study. He listed theology, biology and philosophy as areas related to abortion.

"Judgment is only possible if (the student) has been initiated into these doctrines."

The large crowd, comprised mostly of faculty, offered mixed response to the report.

Robert Bereman, associate dean of the school of PAMS, saw some problems with a one- and two-year general college. Under the plan, students would choose their majors only after being indoctrinated into college courses.

Bereman pointed out that a student with a 2.5 GPA who was always interested in computer science might not be able to get in because too many students happened to be ahead of him.

"We will have a very unhappy sophomore class," he concluded.

Walt Meyers, professor of English, said a two-year general college would "place students based on actual achievement."

Steve Greer, student senate president, was concerned about students with definite career plans. "It puts a restraint on the students when you have a two-year college," he asserted.

"We will make no recommendation that would extend a student's stay at the university," assured moderator John Riddle.

Riddle said two goals of the study were to "provide a basic understanding of the human heritage we all share" and "a mastery of the baseline skills that make learning possible."

In line with this, a core curriculum would allow the administration to guide a student's course selection while still giving him some choice. The plan would also increase the number of high-level courses a student takes outside of his major.

Riddle was critical of the present course requirements.

"They are so amorphous that choices can be made that don't insure the type of goals (we've stated)," he said.

Sam Mozley, associate professor of zoology, supported the suggestions.

"The core curriculum gives an advantage in that courses coming at the end of the career are given more attention," he said.

The addition of a minors program, currently being studied by Student Government, received little opposition. Student Body President Shannon Carson voiced its advantages.

"As majors become more and more tight... we recognize the need to branch out," Carson said. He claimed a minors program would be an advantage to have some way to highlight out-of-major studies "without having to sit there and point them out one by one."

Organizational changes suggested in the report were met with the most opposition and skepticism.

The committee raised the possibility of the psychology department being moved from the School of Education to the School of Humanities and Social Sciences.

Norman Sprinthall, head of the division of counselor education, said the suggestion "hit us like a ton of bricks."

Jim Kalat, associate professor of psychology, said "the department almost unanimously... saw no advantage in being a part of SHASS."

"Well, we just want you to know that we would love to have you," Riddle replied.

The report also called for the addition of a department of fine arts. Meyers seemed unconvinced as he pointed out this was first suggested almost 30 years ago.

Erica Fairchild, commission chairperson, expressed hope that the number of part-time teachers in SHASS will be decreased. Currently 77 percent of all temporary faculty members are located in SHASS.

Edward Clark, associate professor of English, was concerned because "no tenured professor teaches freshman composition."

Larry Monteith, dean of the School of Engineering, was upbeat over the committee's efforts.

He said State's engineering program was sound but appreciated the commission's suggestions. "I think there is a general feeling that the faculty is trying to improve. More have stood and spoken than at most faculty meetings," he concluded.

School deans criticize commission's proposals

Mark Bumgardner
Staff Writer

The deans of three schools on campus are highly critical of an excerpt from the interim report of the Commission on Humanities and Social Sciences.

Printed in Wednesday's edition of Technician, the text in question stated: "The faculty as a whole does not feel responsible for the general education of all undergraduates, but rather tends to emphasize the parochial concerns which mitigate against the best interests of the student."

Several deans were asked if they agreed with the statement.

"No," replied Carl Dolce of the School of Education. "It doesn't hold for the field of education, because we debated 15 years ago about our requirements, and we exceed those of the other programs on campus."

Although Dolce did not mind the commission's input, he was concerned about losing control over a portion of his school's curriculum. "I don't think it's appropriate for (outside) interference."

"I don't think it's accurate," replied J.E. Legates of the School of Agriculture and Life Sciences.

"We have a very well-rounded program."

"When an individual has already decided what he wants to do, I think he is chasing when he gets away from it," Legates added.

"I think it's an overstatement," said Eric Elwood of the School of Forest Resources.

He said his school's program was "far more broad than most programs around here."

"I have no concern over our students being educated with blinders on," he said.

"A lot of the responsibility for choosing the right courses falls on the student himself," Elwood warned. "They don't take advantage of it and won't."

Chairperson Erica Fairchild admitted that some of the faculty members felt threatened. "We're not suggesting students take more than the 18 hours (of humanities and social science courses) already required," she assured. "We would just like to structure it more."

Commission member Robert Bryan said the statement was derived from the committee's research. "Other members of the faculty have made that claim," he said.

Star Trek producer speaks to enormous crowd in Stewart

Robbie Lane S. Jackson
Entertainment Writer

Although the "Star Trek" television series has been out of production for over 15 years, its popularity has increased steadily through reruns, the sale of paraphernalia and, most recently, the three Star Trek motion pictures. The enormous popularity was proven Friday night when Gene Roddenberry, creator and producer of the Star Trek phenomenon, spoke to a sold-out audience in Stewart Theatre.

Roddenberry brought a message that he called "good news and more good news if you like surprises and challenges." He related a story of how, in speaking to the Harvard Luncheon Club 14 years ago, he had talked about the possibility of human colonization of other planets. The "old farts," as Roddenberry called the club, asked in response to his talk, "Who invited this cuckoo?" It was only a few years later that man landed on the moon.

"If you think tomorrow's feats will be in technology, you are wrong. Truly significant events will be in our humanness, not technology," Roddenberry said. "We'll continue to use computers and high tech, and it'll blend in and become a part of us. The computer is a primal human invention, just like the wheel. It's not just another piece of high tech."

Roddenberry explained that the computer is amplifying human mind power the way the engine amplified muscle power. He said we must create concepts of personal morality and discipline and how we should relate to one another. "These are questions that are there for us to provide answers to," he added.

According to Roddenberry, man's knowledge has doubled eight times in 21 years, and by 1996 man's knowledge will be 32 times what it was in 1961. "We will be enjoying sex even when we are in our 90s by then," Roddenberry commented, bringing a roar of laughter and a hearty round of applause.

"You must be ready for the future. Some of us are scared of the computer now the way some of us in the past were afraid of wheels or inventions," Roddenberry reminded. "The computer guarantees the torrent of knowledge will continue."

Senate hires lawyer

Legal advice does not come cheap, and almost never free. Anyone who has ever paid a lawyer has been painfully made aware of this.

Student Government helped to alleviate this problem somewhat last week when the Senate approved a proposal to hire a legal advisor to assist students in matters regarding the law. Most students rarely need such service; however, even the most law-abiding people sometimes need legal advice on a wide array of subjects. Some might even stumble into legal trouble and discover that they need a lawyer.

Although the advisor would not be able to represent students in the courtroom, the advisor can offer advice for the students planning to defend themselves in court. Furthermore, the advisor can also recommend legal actions to be taken or assist the student in hiring a lawyer.

State does have one legal advisor available to students, Sonja Beckham. However, Beckham is the only advisor available as a service to over 20,000 students, and she has other duties and responsibilities as well.

A lawyer hired by Student Government could spend more time with students. This advisor could give primary, if not complete, emphasis on advising students.

While Beckham cannot initiate legal actions against the university as a representative of a student, this lawyer would be in a better position to suggest proceedings for students who wish to file a lawsuit against State.

This legal service is not a measure to help criminal students "beat a rap." On the contrary, the service ensures that the judiciary officials do not take advantage of innocent and poorly represented students.

The Senate has made a bold move in the defense of the students with the allocation of $4,000 to serve the students in legal matters. Students can rest assured that the money will go to a good cause.

King deserves holiday

Politics occasionally afford us an opportunity to dig deep within ourselves, evaluate our inner feelings and hopefully grow from the experience. One such opportunity was the struggle for a national holiday in honor of Martin Luther King Jr.

Every third Monday in January, beginning next year, the nation will take time off to honor King. Before this celebration begins, we need to review the bitter Senate fight and try to come to terms with its implications. Here are a few thoughts given in an effort to legitimize the holiday.

First consider the very warrantable question of King's dealings with communists. J. Edgar Hoover, head of the FBI during the civil rights movement, headed a very extensive probe of King's movement, and much of his findings were ordered closed until the year 2027 by a federal judge. We do know, however, that some of King's aids had close ties with the communist party. How relevant is this?

Walk into my room at any given time, and you might find hanging a few of Dennis Draughton's more palatable cartoons. Yet, as hard as I've tried, I cannot seem to gleam any logic or reason from his libertarian views. In essence, although Draughton and I disagree philosophically, I would be glad to let him assist me in, say, my quest for the Senate in 1990. One might argue that communists are more dangerous than your average, misguided libertarian. Externally, this is true; internally, I doubt it.

As for King himself, consider an excerpt from one of his sermons: "A true Christian cannot be a true Communist, for the two philosophies are antithetical, and all the dialectics of the logicians cannot reconcile them." Tone down the vocabulary a bit, and you could have one of Falwell's sermons. Associating King with communism is equitable with linking conservative and fascists. The comparisons show an indefensible narrow-mindedness.

M.J. BUMGARDNER
Editorial Columnist

Secondly, we must be willing to admit that the holiday was a huge political sell-out. Those who were interested in the black vote supported the measure, while those interested in the die-hard segregationist vote opposed the measure. Apparently in every state, excluding ours, the segregationists constituted the minority.

One senator correctly asserted that if the balloting were done by phone, the measure would have gotten much less support. I try the first to admit that all the credit goes to increased black economic power (translation: a higher GNP brought about by King), not vote-wary congressmen.

Thirdly, we must comparatively consider King's holiday. Other birthday celebrations include Jesus and Washington. One glance should tell you who does not belong. As for Washington, very few of us pause to remember him on our day off. We can't be sure if what we do remember is true because Hoover wasn't around to probe in the late 1700s. Apparently, Washington symbolizes the beginning of America's quest for freedom, while King represents the end.

Finally, we come to the primary, seldom discussed problem many have with King's holiday — heroism. Although the average pundit will say that King was a communist or that he did not do anything for white Americans, their primary concern is that King will become a national hero. Is he deserving?

A hero is someone who is greater than life. They are unafraid of trying something new and fighting for what they believe. Superman is a hero; Susan B. Anthony was a hero; Jesus Christ was a hero. Why not Martin Luther King?

During my Morehead interview, after chastising my church for admitting blacks, a gentleman asked me what I thought of a holiday for King. I said I thought he exemplified what a man could achieve if he followed the divine plan for his life. I said he was an example for us all. King is my personal hero. Why do I think he should be yours? I don't.

I do contend, however, that he will be your children's hero. I contend that one day your grandchildren will read about the summer of '63 and wonder why they couldn't have died in place of the four girls bombed while in Sunday school. I contend that your children and grandchildren will ask you how we could have let prejudice rule us for so long. Finally, I contend that if you read Stride Toward Freedom or Strength To Love (Harper & Row), both by King, you will be better equipped to answer that question for yourself.

To anyone wanting to accost me on the way to class or write a respectable Forum letter, these two readings are a prerequisite. Chaplain Ted Purcell, whose office is in the Baptist Student Center, will be willing to lend you a copy if the library is out. If you read the two books and still don't consider King a hero worthy of a holiday, I have one piece of advice — don't let your kids have a library card.

Proposal absurd

As Inter-Residence Council President for State, I would like to comment on the new parking proposals currently being considered by the Environment and Transportation Committee. First of all, to say that on-campus residents do not need vehicles is totally ridiculous. Though most of the freshmen are on the meal plan, many sophomores and upperclassmen provide their own meals. Therefore, a large percentage of residents need transportation to and from the area restaurants and grocery stores. Granted we have Hillsborough Street and its conveniences but, trying to carry two bags of groceries three-quarters of a mile from the A&P to South Hall, or eating at the same few restaurants over and over gets old fast.

The proposal that sophomores will not be allowed cars on campus would be viewed as a deterrent for on-campus living. Does the administration really want to discourage sophomores from living on campus? By eliminating their present parking privileges, the sophomore housing demand will be drastically reduced. Is this really the aim of the administration's present proposal?

The proposal to move all resident parking to the fringe lot on the far west side of campus is ludicrous. Since this area is rather isolated it would become a very attractive place for thieves and vandals. Considering this university has the highest amount of violent crimes in the nation, it is almost a joke to hear a proposal which would force a female student, returning to campus at night, to walk alone to North Hall or the Middle East, each of which is at least a 30-minute walk. This is not taking into account the other locations on campus, some of which are poorly lit. Although the student could call Public Safety to escort her, if she worked and must be late several nights a week, Public Safety would soon become a taxi service. I urge the Transportation Committee to reject such a request.

The fact that residents have the convenience of living on campus should not be reason enough to assume that they have little need for transportation. We do require food, social lives and in some cases, employment. As to the effective utilization of parking spaces, if faculty members were given resident parking spaces, those spaces would be empty at night for the most part. To leave those spaces empty at night would not only be an inconvenience for residents but also a waste.

I do recognize the need for a change in the parking situation at N.C. State but, I ask that the Transportation Committee re-evaluate the present proposal. As a resident I do not wish to be "campus bound" my entire four years of college.

Steve Crouse
Inter-Residence Council President

Residents hurt

I would like to address the recent parking proposal that was printed in Technician several issues ago. First of all, it is totally absurd for transportation to take the current resident (R) parking spaces and change them to commuter (C) and staff (S) spaces. At night many spaces very close to dorms and other buildings on campus will be empty, but nevertheless, all the resident cars will be parked out in the boonies just waiting to be vandalized.

Parking a vehicle such as an R vehicle so far away leads to many safety problems. Many times a resident's car is parked and never seen again until the next trip home. Is the transportation department willing to pay Public Safety the necessary funds to hire more officers to patrol the area more efficiently? If the additional officers are not hired, the break-in rate will probably soar to its highest point ever due to the fact that there is little or no lighting in the fringe lot area. Secondly is the fact that young ladies will have to walk long distances from car to room or from room to car. Daylight won't be so bad, but nighttime is what bothers me. Anyone with common sense can see that the possibility of rape will increase. Once again, transportation could foot the bill for additional Public Safety officers to patrol the area and escort the ladies to and from their cars.

Although safety is of great concern, we must also consider the price of a parking sticker. I, as a resident, pay $60 per school year to park on campus. This is up $25 from last school year. If R spots are to be taken away and more C and S spots added, I think that R prices should be lowered and C and S prices raised $25 each. A resident needs a parking space the most. I guess that's why he / she gets stuck with the $60. A commuter has a place to park all the time at his home or apartment. When a resident arrives from a weekend at home, he needs a place to park because campus is his home. As to prices, if more staff and commuter spaces come about, my feelings are to lower R prices and raise C and S prices. There is no reason for a resident to have to pay $60 to park on campus and have to park out in the boonies and walk 20 minutes to get to his room. When I stated a 20-minute walk, I was not kidding. It takes at least that long to walk from the fringe lot, soon to be R spaces, to some of the dorms (ex: Gold, Welch, South Hall, etc.).

When the transportation people are making a decision of this nature, they should get more input from the student body, because these are the people that will be affected the most by this ridiculous proposal, especially the residents of the campus dorms.

Spoof not satire

I am writing this to make a complaint about one of the articles in the "spoof edition" of The Daily Tar Heel.

The story on UNC's "napalm" slogan on p. 2 was unacceptable. I was disgraced to share the same school with students who adopt the attitude that "anything goes" with satire. The definition of satire is holding something trivial up to mock it, in a serious context (ex: Pope's Rape of the Lock). That's satire. I was appalled to find a "satirical" article using a picture and story on napalm victims in Vietnam. If Technician considers that funny or even acceptable in a paper run by tomorrow's "leaders," I believe you guys need a re-evaluation of our paper and yourselves.

All's gonna be alright on the farm

Moo-U scholars, take note. It's time we stop trying to run the farm ourselves and let the hired hands take care of the chores.

So what if the big crop's lost for a spell? It's time we kick back and let the rest of the harvest mature.

DEVIN STEELE

Executive Sports Editor

Now how can I tell you not to worry, you ask, with so much of your time invested in the program? No, 'tain't exactly what we expected at this time, but why should we try to offer a fix for something that ain't exactly broken?

Granted, Farmer V's got a few kinks in the machinery now, but ain't nothin' a little tinkering, a few breaks here and there and, most of all, the utmost support ain't mend. Specifically, I'm talking 'bout that basketball team of ours. You know, the one that pushed our braggin' rights to the hilt during the summer months, the one that had our red blood-a-pumpin' in the fall, the one that made for cozy December nights — and the one that's making our ever-existence walk a chalkline right now.

AFTER THE PACK'S 72-66 win over Florida State Saturday night, V had to play defense against the media. Call it interrogation, if you'd like. Unlike in Wednesday night's 10-point loss to Carolina, V went to his bench early, keeping in a steady, fresh rotation. Why didn't you do that against the Heels when your players really showed signs of fatigue in the late-going, the media probed.

"If you want to go to that particular game, you got a 15-point lead and you haven't really played that many players, it's not the time to start," V replied. "It's something we always wanted to do, but you also pick your spots. I don't think that was the opportunity.

"You have to realize for that game, we had a great deal of rest. It was a TV game, and there were a lot of time-outs. I think a lot of other things had to do with our demise the second half. I don't think it was because of the shape we were in."

V admitted, however, he had made a realization prior to Saturday's game. "Yes, we felt we had to play more players tonight, and we did. We feel we have to play these kids and give them the opportunity to give the others a blow (rest). That's something we have to do and we're going to do it. The first sign of a little fatigue, we did it."

THAT'S ONE STEP in getting his team back on a roll. Step two, V wanted his team to get into its offense better, despite the fact that the backcourt characteristically has been a problem spot.

"We wanted to run our offense a little better," he said. "We wanted to build a lead methodically if we could."

And that it did. The Wolfpack built a six-point half-time advantage (37-31), and gradually extended that margin to 10, then 12, then 14, before the Seminoles pulled to within six in the last minute.

Most noticeable about the offense was the guard play, which has been moody again this season. The backcourt, averaging just 44 percent from the field coming into the game, connected on 60 percent (15-25) of its shots, a statistic the Pack has desperately needed and a far cry from its 5-of-32 effort at St. John's. Plus, the guards turned the ball over just six times. True, one game does not mean a sudden turnaround, but it could mean the start of steady improvement.

The questions kept rolling in. Are you happy with the situation, being 10-5 instead of, say, 13-2, V? "Look, we're just a basket away here and there to being involved in a super season right now," he said. "But that's the way it goes. I'd be very disappointed if we weren't in a position to win games and were playing very poorly."

"WE'RE 10-5, and the losses all have been to quality teams. If I said to you before the season that we might lose at Maryland, at Kentucky, at Carolina, at St. John's, I don't think it'd been a shock to anybody, especially if I'd told you we were gonna lose our big kid, too. So, in that regard, we're probably just a game away from where we might've been anyway."

"But," V contended, "it certainly is a different basketball team than I would've expected to have at this point."

Speaking of the big guy, has the Wolfpack adjusted to his loss? "Yes, because we're the same club now that we were last year, basically," V said. "It has the same strengths and the same weaknesses. It wasn't as hard as you would think to adjust because these kids are veterans, but the same problem areas are there. That ball club last year struggled at times, and we do, too. In that respect, I'm proud of the way the kids have battled at some of the places we've played."

And we should be proud, too. And patient.

Wentz, Turner lead grapplers past Maryland

Tim Peeler
Sports Writer

Fueled by outstanding performances from senior Kurt Wentz and sophomore Scott Turner, State's nationally 14th-ranked grapplers burned Maryland Sunday, 38-11.

The Pack upped its record to 2-0 in the ACC and 12-5 overall, while Maryland slipped to 1-2, 2-3.

State dominated the Terps by winning seven matches and drawing one. The Pack forfeited the 134 pound division and lost at 177.

Freshman Jim Best began the match with an easy 9-4 decision in the 118-pound division to run his record to 12-8.

Wentz (126-lbs., 14-8) followed with his second technical fall (15 points or more) of the season.

After the Terps' Tony Russo won by forfeit, freshman Joe Cesari scored a superior decision in the 142-lbs. class, 10-2.

The battle at 150 pounds proved to be the day's best match.

Wolfpack sophomore Scott Turner and Maryland's Phil Brown entered the contest with identical 12-3 records.

The first period ended scoreless, but Turner soon took control and emerged with a 4-0 decision.

Coach Bob Guzzo was displeased with an official's call that forced a draw between State's Chuck Murray (10-9-1) and one of Maryland's best wrestlers, John Kostelac (15-2-1).

State's Greg Fatool, ranked 6th nationally, raised his record to 18-2 with an 11-5 victory.

State's last several matches due to injuries, returned to action at 177, but dropped a difficult 4-5 decision.

State finished the match with two encouraging wins by freshman Mike Lombardo (15-8), who won by default, and junior heavy-weight Garrett Keith (10-10), who scored a pin in the second period.

State's next contest will be Saturday night in Chapel Hill against nationally ranked North Carolina.

Wolfpack tankers stroke past Cavs

From Staff Reports

The men's and women's swimming and diving teams both remained undefeated this weekend with key Atlantic Coast Conference victories over Virginia as part of the Wolfpack Parents' Week-end.

Led by four firsts by Susan Butcher, the women posted a 74-66 win Sunday to take over sole possession of first place in the conference.

The men, which claimed the top spot in the first seven events to open up a 48-13 lead, went on to win 68-45 Saturday.

Both teams now are 5-0 overall and 3-0 in the ACC heading into this weekend's clashes with South Carolina and Clemson. The Cavalier men fell to 4-6 overall and 0-2 in league play, while the women dropped to 9-2 and 3-0.

In the men's meet, junior freestyle sprinter Rocco Aceto provided the most exciting moment in the meet, winning the 50-free in the ACC's fastest time of the year at 20.90. Overall, the Pack men won nine-of-13 events.

Vols oust Pack women

From Staff Reports

The women's basketball team, playing without Linda Page, suffered a 72-57 setback to Tennessee Saturday after at the Volunteers' Stokely Athletics Center.

Page, the 17th-ranked Pack's leading scorer, missed the team's plane to Knoxville, Tenn., Friday.

State stayed close in the first half and trailed by four (31-27) at intermission. But the Vols, which held a commanding 47-25 edge on the boards, broke the game open with a second-half rally to claim their 10th victory in 16 games.

"The only thing that was keeping us in the game the first half was our forced turnovers," said coach Kay Yow. "In the second half, we were the one turning the ball over. But the real difference was on the boards."

Sophomore center Trena Trice scored 25 for the Wolfpack, now 10-5.

Roddenberry urges look toward future

Roddenberry explained that he feels too few people are calling attention to the signs or areas of human growth, which is one of his main reasons for traveling around the country on the lecture circuit. He remembers having been "chewed out by Arthur C. Clarke when he heard me turn down a lecture request," because he believes it is important for these challenges to be brought to mankind in order to "make you aware."

Roddenberry stated that we must find out how we are all connected. "We must turn our energy to getting along, making changes in ourselves, our loyalties, our values and our priorities. We must begin a new revolution."

He then introduced the infamous "Star Trek" blooper reel by saying, "You can put your trust in any life form that is able to laugh at itself."

After the blooper reel, Roddenberry fielded questions from the floor. He assured the audience that he would try to answer all questions. "If I don't know an answer - I'm a writer - I'll invent one."

In answer to which Star Trek movie did he like best, Roddenberry said, "I didn't like the second one as well as the third. However, Star Trek I was really more what my vision of a Star Trek movie should be."

Roddenberry was asked how he conceived the idea of "Star Trek," the series, in the first place? He explained that in TV, the writer was always faced with heavy censorship, and he wanted some way to express his opinions and beliefs and get away with it. He felt he could do this by means of science fiction, with alien beings and far-away worlds and times. "I was trying to find a way to write about all those things I wanted to, and it worked."

Referring to Star Trek and its mission, he said, "If it is not the way we really are, it's the way we ought to be."

Roddenberry told of how Spock's part as science officer in the pilot was originally played by a woman, not a man. After showing the pilot to test audiences, it was decided that a woman as second-in-command would not work. He was also told by the network powers to "get rid of the guy with the ears."

Roddenberry decided to keep Spock and make him second-in-command. He created an outline of the role, but Leonard Nimoy (who just received his star on the Walk of Stars in Hollywood a week ago) made the character flesh and blood.

On the character of Spock, Roddenberry observed, "I do not think we humans should get rid of our emotions. We must control them, but we must also enjoy them."

Roddenberry was also asked to name his favorite "Star Trek" episode. He named "City on the Edge of Forever" and "The Menagerie" as his favorites. He mentioned that Isaac Asimov's (the famed science-fiction author) favorite episode was the first pilot of the TV show, starring Jeffrey Hunter.

Roddenberry expects us to spend the next eight or 10 centuries just exploring the universe. He compared this to what it must have been like to explore America the first time. He remarked that "God must be smart."

Basically, Roddenberry's lecture revolved around the idea, although not explicitly stated, that the earth is a spaceship that we all have to live on. We must either survive together or perish. Roddenberry believes man will survive.

"You are surrounded now by excitement and challenge. If someone sends you a time machine, sit for now."

Roddenberry's message could be summed up by Spock's short philosophy on life - "Live long and prosper."

SPSS/PC

Statistical and Reporting Software for IBM PC/XT and AT*

SPSS/PC is the most comprehensive statistical package available for performing simple or complex tasks, regardless of data size. It maintains feature and language compatibility with mainframe SPSS, while optimizing for the PC environment.

Designed to maximize your productivity, SPSS/PC offers three-letter truncation of commands; the ability to batch process commands; save and enter commands in groups; receive on-line help; redirect input and output to screen, disk and/or printers and more.

Statistics range from simple descriptive to complex multivariate, including Multiple Regression, ANOVA, Factor and Cluster analysis. Loglinear and nonparametric procedures are also included.

Simple facilities allow transfer of files between SPSS/PC and programs like Lotus 1-2-3, dBase II and SAS. A complete Report Writer, plotting facilities and communications program for mainframes round out a fully integrated product.
