Plans underway for new textiles facility

Jeff Cherry
Staff Writer

Planning is underway for a new facility for the School of Textiles, spurred by an $11 million appropriation from the North Carolina General Assembly, according to Dame Hamby, dean of the school.

The building, which will house all programs of the School of Textiles and will eventually cost $30 million, will be the first located on the university's recently acquired Dorothea Dix Hospital property.

According to Hamby, planning by the school has only reached the stage of space allocation for the various functions and programs the building will house. He hopes that construction work can begin in January 1987 and be completed by 1990.

Hamby stressed that any technical planning will be made in accordance with the master development plan for the 780-acre Dix tract being prepared by the Carley Capital Group in cooperation with the University Planning Committee.

Karen Peterson, executive assistant to the chancellor and chair of the committee, said the placement of the textiles facility on the Dix tract does not represent a bypass of the planning process at all.

"I personally am very pleased that the first building will be academic rather than an industrial park type of facility," Peterson said.

Peterson said the textiles facility would provide a concrete base for planning for the remainder of the Dix property and would have closer ties to the university than an industrial research development.

Hamby disclosed a proposal for such a research development at the last Board of Trustees meeting.

Details of the proposal, entitled "A National Center for Manufacturing Technology in Apparel, Textiles and Fibers," are confidential, but Associate Dean of Textiles William Walsh said the $30 million budget for the proposal was mostly capital funding for the building and equipment.

Vice Chancellor for Research

Franklin Hart called Hamby's statement to the board a report of preliminary planning efforts with "no formal submission of a proposal."

The availability of a site on the Dix tract for a new School of Textiles means that previous plans for a major renovation and expansion of 46-year-old Nelson Hall, the school's current home, will be scrapped.

Hamby said that both Nelson Hall and the David Clark Laboratories — a total of 180,000 sq. ft. — would be turned over to the university after the new 225,000 sq. ft. building is occupied.

"The university will get double its money's worth: two square feet for the price of one," he said.

The additional space in the new facility will be used to accommodate the rapidly growing graduate and research programs and extension services of the school.

The school, the largest textile research facility in the United States, enrolls 75 percent of the nation's textile doctoral candidates and 50 percent of the master's candidates.

Committee hears plans for new parking deck

Chloe Lowder
Staff Writer

The Physical Environment Committee met Wednesday to hear an update on plans for a new parking deck for the campus.

"We have now selected two primary sites," said Robert Martin of the Institute for Transportation Research and Education.

"We had chosen four sites but now have narrowed it down to the Friendly Drive lot and the Harris lot," he said.

Martin said the reasons for choosing the two sites were based on location on campus, traffic flow conditions and financial considerations for the deck.

"We're looking at a deck with about 1,000 spaces.

"These two sites are fairly comparable in cost for the deck," he said.

Further evaluation and the investigation of logistics will be needed before they make the decision, according to Martin.

The financing of the new deck would be primarily through student parking permits, and the cost of the permits could increase considerably.

The committee discussed the possibility of a shared cost for the deck, with the cost being reflected in all of the permits on campus. Another possibility discussed was having the deck as reserved space, with the cost being covered through permits for the deck only.

In other business the committee discussed the proposed campus poster policy.

The committee is working to have bulletin boards placed at 28 locations, making a total of 88 boards on campus. After the installation of the new boards, the committee will discuss implementation of a policy which will regulate the placement of posters and fliers.

"We don't want to eliminate posters on campus," said Perry Woods, a student member of the committee, "but we don't want walls full of tape either."

Service compares area groceries

Food Lion, Big Star least expensive

Elliot Inman
Staff Writer

Since money is a scarce commodity for most students, Student Government's Student Consumer Service has made it their business to find "the lowest prices in town."

According to the service's survey of area retail grocery stores, the study showed Food Lion and Big Star to be least expensive.

Gena Harris, director of the program, visited five area grocery stores with a "typical" shopping list to see how they compared.

The stores visited included A&P on Hillsborough Street, A&P on Western Boulevard, Food Lion on Avent Ferry Road, Big Star on Cameron Village and Fast Fare on Western Boulevard.

Stores were judged on their prices on such products as orange juice, cereal, Pop Tarts, bread, milk, sandwich meats, peanut butter, jelly, mustard, ketchup, cheese, frozen pot pies, cookies, soda, beer and wine.

Food Lion and Big Star tied for the lowest price honors on 90 percent of the products checked. Only in a few cases did either A&P have the lowest price.

Although both A&P's prices were the same on about 80 percent of the products checked, there was a difference: A&P on Western Boulevard had the lower prices on milk, beer and sandwich meats, but prices on other food items were very comparable.

Students who love cookies should note that A&P on Western had lower prices on Oreos, Chips Ahoy. Almost Home and Duncan Hines, but A&P

In-state tuition subject of forum

Kathy Kyle
Assignment Editor

In-state residency will be the topic of a forum sponsored by Student Legal Adviser Ronnie Hazen in the Walnut Room of the Student Center Tuesday from 2-4 p.m.

The forum, Hazen said, will inform students what the requirements are for getting in-state tuition.

Hazen will make a presentation on in-state tuition, and afterward, she and a panel made up of university faculty will answer questions from the audience.

Since tuition for out-of-state students is over four times as much as in-state tuition, Hazen encouraged all out-of-state students to attend. In-state tuition is $810 and out-of-state tuition is $3,730 for full-time students.

Hazen said that getting in-state tuition is not that easy. "It's hard to fool them," she said.

"But if you do intend to stay in North Carolina, there is some documentation that can help."

Where a student registers to vote, registers their car and registers for taxes are examples of documentation that could serve as proof of residency, according to Hazen.

The panel of the forum consists of Dennis Jackson, assistant director of Lifelong Education; Tommie Griffin, assistant director of admissions; James H. Sweet, director of student loans; and Sonja Beckham, university legal adviser.

Out-of-state students make up 12.2 percent of the total student body and international students make up 3.7 percent of the student body at State, according to Rosalind Reed, assistant director of information services.

Beckham encouraged all students to attend.

IN-STATE TUITION FORUM

Topics to be discussed at in-state tuition forum in the Walnut Room from 2-4 p.m. on Tuesday:

- cost of in-state tuition versus out-of-state
- how to apply for in-state tuition
- how to change residency
- open discussion with university officials
- how to change car and voter registration

University Dining biggest employer of foreign students

Ajay Dholakia
Staff Writer

Because of persistent advertisement among international students, cooperation with the International Student Office (ISO) and flexibility in work schedules, University Dining is the biggest employer of international students on campus, according to University Dining officials.

International Student Adviser Donald Roberts recommended the recruitment of international students to University Dining.

"We sent fliers to King Village, Alexander Residence Hall and to other international students who live off campus," said Arthur White, assistant to the vice chancellor. White also maintains contact with Roberts and Judith Green at the ISO.

Currently, 11 international students, three spouses of international students and two high school international students work for University Dining, according to White. But there is scope for more employment, he said.

The foreign students start at any position, depending upon their capabilities and the availability of job openings, White said. Fluency in English is most often not the criterion.

International students must have been in school for one semester. They must obtain permission from the ISO and must have a Social Security number.

"International students have been our most dependable employees," White said. "They do a good job."

University Catering is another one of the food services that employs international students.

"It's amusing to work with foreign students," said Beth Loadman, coordinator of University Catering. "They add flair to catering services."

Foreign students have brought about many variations in catering standards by bringing in more creativity, according to Ellen Loring, student employee in charge of training the catering personnel.

"They come up with different styles in table setting, and we just adopt them," she said.

University Catering is also offering more job opportunities, White said.

"With the projected increase in the wages for food services employees, we are expecting more international and American students to join us," he said.

Illegal drinking a $2,000 mistake

Dear Steven: It's almost the new year and all I seem to see at bookstores and supermarket checkouts are books and magazines about astrology. You know, the horoscopes and all that stuff. Well, I picked up one and the info seemed to be quite accurate. Now I'm thinking about getting my chart done by a professional. My wife says it's all a bunch of garbage. I figure it's only fifty bucks, so why not go for it? Any comments? — SCORPIO

SCORPIO: I'm not so sure it's all nonsense. After all, if the moon controls the tides and our bodies are composed mainly of water, well... you decide for yourself. Hope your stars are lucky.

Dear Steven: Our new neighbor is a girl who seems to have a tough time settling in. She's always running around the apartment complex borrowing this and that. I don't mind her visits. What bothers me is the way she does it — wearing next to nothing. The lady is hot, I must admit, but I see big trouble in her future if she doesn't learn to dress properly for her public jaunts. A friend was attacked last year in our complex. It can happen again with the right encouragement. What can we do to convince her that she's stupid, not sexy? — GIRLS IN 8A

LADIES: Grab her for a woman-to-woman talk as soon as possible. You're right; she is asking for trouble and she's not the only one who could end up getting hurt. Straighten her out with the facts of life, pronto.

Straight Up

with

Steve the Bartender

Dear Steven: Say I go into a bar with my girlfriend (I'm 22; she's 17) and order a brew for myself and a soft drink for her. We sit at a table and a few minutes later I walk back to the bar for another beer, but this time I give it to my girlfriend. Is this against the law? She really wasn't "served" by the bartender and didn't argue when he asked for her ID. — THIRSTY IN HIGH POINT

THIRSTY: Take your wallet out — not to pay for the check, but to fork over a possible $2,000 fine for your illegal actions. Pull that stunt and don't expect to blame anyone else. The bartender wouldn't have a thing to worry about except for, of course, the commotion caused by an undercover law enforcement officer taking you away.

Send your problems, questions and comments to Steve the Bartender c/o Technician, P.O. Box 8608, Suites 3120-3121, Student Center, Raleigh, N.C. 27695-8608. Steve is also available as a guest speaker.

Summit first step toward agreement

President Reagan arrived in Geneva Saturday for his summit meeting with Soviet Premier Mikhail Gorbachev. As the entire world watches, Reagan and Gorbachev will try to reach some kind of agreement that can put an end to the ever-accelerating arms race.

Every president since John Kennedy has managed to negotiate some kind of agreement with the Soviets. For a long time, it appeared that Reagan might break that string of diplomatic success between the world's two superpowers. Now, finally, Reagan and Gorbachev have reached the bargaining table. With the whole world intently watching what goes on in Geneva this week, expectations shouldn't be too high for this meeting. The success of this meeting probably won't be measured by agreements but by the tone of the meetings.

Reagan won the presidency by taking a hard line on the Soviet Union. Throughout his first term, he decried the Soviet Union as an "evil empire" and gave no indication that he would be an easy man for the Soviets to negotiate with at the bargaining table. Since his re-election, however, Reagan has softened his rhetoric concerning the Soviet Union somewhat, and hopes have been raised considerably about the chance for a real breakthrough at the summit meeting this week.

That would be nice, but if nothing more happens at this meeting than a week of breaking the ice between these two powerful and charismatic leaders, we should all be pleased. The differences between our two countries are great and have grown during the last five years. If this summit meeting helps lend an air of cooperation between the two nations and sets the stage for later and more meaningful meetings, then it should be considered an unqualified success.

Considering Reagan's past remarks on the Soviet Union and Gorbachev's on the United States, it is noteworthy that they have finally reached the point where negotiations are possible. This meeting is only the first step toward cooperation between the United States and the Soviet Union. Given the recent history of these two nations, a first step is better than none at all and is, in fact, a pleasant surprise.

Welcome back, Chris

Friday marked the return of center Chris Washburn to the Reynolds Coliseum floor. Arrested last December for stealing stereo equipment from another athlete's room, Washburn received a delayed three-day jail sentence and was ordered to do 320 hours of community service work.

At the time, head basketball coach Jim Valvano said that the decision to reinstate Washburn to the team would depend solely on Washburn. First, he had to complete the terms of his sentence, and second, he had to demonstrate that he was ready to be a solid citizen, both in the classroom and in the community. Basketball would have to come after all that.

Valvano was widely quoted last season that this experience could be a positive one or a negative one for Washburn. Valvano pointed to forward Lorenzo Charles, who was arrested and convicted in 1982 for robbing a pizza delivery man. That experience, Valvano said, was a major turning point in Charles' life. The stereo incident could be the same way for Washburn.

Evidently, it has been. After completing his 320 hours of community service work, Washburn actually volunteered to do more. He also passed all six hours that he took in summer school. Overall, it seems that Washburn has indeed used last winter's nightmare to refocus his life.

Wolfpack fans can now look forward to watching this extremely talented player, and hopefully Washburn will lead the Pack to a great many victories in the upcoming season. But the biggest victory for Washburn appears to have been won off the court, and that is more important than anything that happens on

With all the negative publicity being given to college athletics these days, it is heartwarming to see a positive story such as Washburn's. It could have turned out worse — much worse. And there still are many obstacles for Washburn to face. Hostile crowds will gleefully await Washburn's appearance throughout the Atlantic Coast Conference, especially at Duke.

But at least Washburn will be going to Duke. He didn't get the chance a year ago. Welcome back, Chris Washburn.

'Evangelists' entertain students

As I left my stats class last Wednesday, I saw a crowd gathered around a speaker on the brickyard. On further examination, I saw that the man speaking was holding a large wooden cross. When I heard him preaching, I thought, "What a tremendous way to convey the message of the gospel!"

As I listened a little longer, however, the speaker said that we are all on our way to hell for "sins" such as attending college and going to church. I must admit I had never heard the expressions "go to class" and "go to hell" used interchangeably before.

The rest of the day could have been extremely depressing for some of us. In fact, some of you might still be having nightmares of a judge in suspenders holding a huge wooden cross, beating you over the head with a 50-pound Bible until you surrender your State registration card to him.

One great thing about America is that we all have the freedom to believe in whatever we wish. Citizens of many other countries don't have that right. As a public institution of higher learning, State provides sanctuary for both intellectuals and weirdos (those who wish they were intellectuals) to express their thoughts, fantasies and ideas on campus.

JEFF STILES

Editorial Columnist

The brickyard is, of course, the favorite place for these speakers.

Last week, several self-proclaimed (and apparently self-made) "evangelists" came and entertained students passing by the free expression tunnel and brickyard. I say "entertained" because everyone got a good laugh out of it, with virtually no one taking seriously what was said. After all, the Bible says, "A merry heart doeth good like a medicine," but spiritual things, ought to be taken seriously.

Our students, however, shouldn't be blamed for not taking these men seriously. It's hard to keep a straight face when a man says we're all going to hell for attending college and receiving a worldly education. Hey dude, as long as we live in the world, we're going to be surrounded by worldly influences. You can run, but you can't hide.

I just hope that students won't scorn true

Biblical Christianity because a few crazies, for some unknown reason, try to warn of sin while simultaneously espousing absurdities such as "All music glorifies the flesh and is from Satan" or "Cigarette-smoking sinners would stick anything in their mouths."

Many God-fearing students disagreed with the methods and attitudes of these speakers and spoke out vehemently against their proposals.

Although God does hate sin, I'm so glad that He states in the Bible: "For God sent not His son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through Him might be saved," (John 3:17) and "For the wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." (Romans 6:23)

Through all of this judgmental preaching, students were subjected to scorn and stereotypical generalizations. As I stood and listened to these speakers, however, I felt proud of my fellow students for respecting the speakers' right to be heard. Everyone appeared to be polite.

Our recent visitors to the brickyard seemed to ignore the gospel that tells of God's love and forgiveness. Indeed, it is this gospel that is capable of giving us hope in life.

Gorbachev's remarks near target

WASHINGTON — Immediately after Secretary of State George Shultz's sit-down in Moscow with Soviet Leader Mikhail Gorbachev, word circulated that the leader of all the Russians had given Shultz a proper dressing-down. It was said that not only had Gorbachev insulted Shultz but had shown himself ignorant of the American political system. With that, everyone slammed their briefing books and returned to Washington, an appropriate scowl on their respective faces. Who can blame them? Gorbachev had quoted — brace yourself — Eisenhower.

Yes, Dwight David Eisenhower. Later, in one of those government briefings in which the identity of the official is never revealed, it was disclosed what Gorbachev had said that sent everyone into a deep and, as these things go, profound depression. He said that "extremists" in the government and the "military-industrial complex" dominate American policy and were trying to stop efforts to improve U.S.-Soviet relations.

That it appears is the sum and substance of Gorbachev's anti-American tirade, it should be added, in a gruff manner and by way of interruptions. Still, those of us who were expecting something out of the Nikita Khrushchev era — a mugging of a desk top with a blunt shoe — were keenly disappointed. Gorbachev did not even say anything about "Negroes in the South" to counter references to Soviet slave labor. In fact, it's hard to see exactly what he did say that was so awful and represented so profound of American politics.

Nevertheless, the effect on the administration was both swift and inexplicable. The senior official described Shultz as "disappointed but not surprised." The president, though, reacted as any real American would. Gorbachev's remarks had Reagan's "adrenaline going," the official said, and he warned that should Gorbachev talk that way to the president himself, Reagan would be "vigorous" right back. And then the senior official compared the middle-aged Gorbachev to the young Stalin.

RICHARD COHEN

Of course, words alone may simply not communicate the tone of the meeting, and so it is possible that you simply had to be in the room with Gorbachev to understand why he so steamed the Americans he addressed. The words themselves are, by Soviet standards, not only fairly mild, but worse than that, fairly accurate. That line about the "military-industrial complex" was coined for Eisenhower by a speech writer, Malcolm C. Moos, and used by the president in his 1961 farewell address. The good general was not the first, nor the last, to warn that the defense industry was a powerful force in its own right, capable of creating policy if only to sustain profits.

As for "extremists" in the government, once again Gorbachev is in the general vicinity of the target. It's hard to know what to call Richard Perle, the influential assistant defense secretary. Perle is on record as saying that with the possible exception of the Rush-Bagot Treaty of 1817 limiting Canadian and U.S. armaments on the Great Lakes, he can't think of another that's worth the paper it's written on. Perle is not only the number one arms-control adviser to Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, but he also represents an important school of thought within the Reagan administration.

It is not necessary to defend Gorbachev's statement, manners or, for that matter, his probably slim understanding of America to nevertheless appreciate how he might have come by his views. The administration speaks with two voices when it comes to arms control. One can rightfully be called extremist — so hostile to the Soviets that it rejects the very notion that an arms-control agreement with them is anything more than a sucker's game. The other, while more reasonable, seems in perpetual disarray, both clumsy and amateurish in its dealings with the Soviets, and, as with National Security Adviser Robert McFarlane's interpretation of the ABM Treaty, likely to reverse course on a dime.

It is not nice to interrupt, and surely Gorbachev knew what he was doing when he did so. On the other hand, the real-life equivalent of sticks and stones (MIRVs can break your bones) is what matters and not names like "extremist." Given some standard Soviet exaggeration, Gorbachev mirrored what U.S. policy looks like to him. Take a good look. It may not look that different to you.

Harriers sweep district titles

Todd McGee
Sports Editor

The men's and women's cross-country teams swept the team titles at the District III championships in Greenville, S.C., qualifying teams for next Monday's NCAA championships in Milwaukee, Wis.

The men, who Pack coach Rollie Geiger said would be a contender for one of the four qualifying berths going into the meet, surprised everyone by taking the team title.

State placed only two runners in the top 10 but had five in the top 30, surpassing Geiger's pre-meet goal of placing five in the top 40.

"We ran very well from No. 1 through No. 7," Geiger said Sunday. "It was just a matter of the men's team running very well."

Geiger said he was not surprised that the men would not single out any one individual, citing the team effort instead.

"I think going into the race the men had the opportunity to win or finish fifth or sixth and not qualify," he said. "I thought we had the ability to do it. All seven runners just ran very well."

A pair of juniors paced the Pack effort. Pat Piper finished seventh out of 184 runners over the 8,000-meter course with a time of 30:24. Teammate Ricky Wallace followed Piper across the line in eighth place, just 10 seconds back.

Gavin Gaynor (14th), Andy Herr (23rd) and Charlie Purser (24th) rounded out the Pack's scoring, while freshmen Jeff Taylor (32nd) and Steve Brown (45th) also competed for State.

State's 63 points put it 46 points ahead of second-place Tennessee, while ACC champion North Carolina and Auburn tied for third with 129 points.

All four earned spots in the NCAA championships.

For the women, the results were the same, although it was not as unexpected.

"Right now we do have the best personnel on any one particular team in the district," Geiger said. "I expected the women to win."

Freshman Suzie Tuffey led the field of 136 runners across the line. Tuffey and teammate Janet Smith, a sophomore, battled for the lead much of the way before Tuffey pulled away towards the end.

Tuffey's time over the 5,000-meter layout was 17:09, compared to Smith's 17:16. Teammate Kathy Ormsby was fourth, just six seconds back of Smith and five seconds behind Clemson's Ute Jamroz.

Renee Harbaugh and Stacy Bilotta finished ninth and tenth, giving the Pack five runners in the top 10 and a team total of 26. Kentucky copped the women's other qualifying spot with a team total of 95, a whopping 69 points back of State.

Patty Metzler, who finished 36th, and Virginia Bryan (53rd) rounded out the women's squad.

"We're getting improvement from Patty and Virginia, and that's encouraging," Geiger said.

The District III title, marked the second in a row for the women. Geiger, however, felt improvement all the same.

"You look for improvement each year. This year we had five in the top 10. We didn't do that last year," he said.

The trip to the national meet marks only the second ever for the men's team, which placed ninth nationally in its first appearance last year. The women have appeared in four straight NCAA meets and have taken two national titles. State finished third in last year's championships.

Debbie Liske heads the ball in State's hard-fought 4-2 loss to the Heels in the second round of the NCAA playoffs Saturday in Chapel Hill.

Clemson, Heels boot Pack out of playoffs

The men's and women's soccer teams were eliminated from the NCAA soccer tournaments by the defending national champions this weekend. The men were again booted out of the playoffs by Atlantic Coast Conference foe Clemson, 5-2, Sunday afternoon in Clemson, S.C. The women dropped a 4-2 decision to North Carolina in Chapel Hill Saturday.

Last year, the Tigers defeated State 2-1 in Raleigh and went on to win the national title.

UNC's Carrie Setwetyk scored a pair of first half goals Saturday as the second-ranked Heels opened a 3-0 lead in the opening period and went on to down State 4-2 in the second round of the tourney.

Birthe Hegstad also tallied for the Heels before intermission to give UNC a commanding lead in the physical contest.

But the 14th-ranked Pack, which had lost two earlier matches with UNC by lopsided 3-0 and 6-0 scores, got a goal each from Laura Kerrigan and Debbie Liske to avert a third straight shutout.

State played solidly for most of the game, but a few minor miscues allowed UNC to build a lead, according to sophomore Krista Leap.

"It was probably the best game we played all year," Leap said. "We just made a few mistakes and they capitalized on them. But everyone was happy with the way we played."

Liske opened State's scoring by booting a deflection back into the goal. Freshman Kim Daley was credited with the assist. Kerrigan scored the second goal on a penalty kick.

Blue Devils snap grid win streak at 2 with 31-19 victory

Todd McGee
Sports Editor

Nobody would believe him, not even his players it seemed, but Tom Reed was right — Duke's got a helluva football team.

Well, at least it seemed so Saturday. But Reed's Wolfpack had a lot to do with that. For it was the Wolfpack that came out flat in the opening quarter, allowing Duke a 71-yard touchdown pass on its first play and fumbling two kickoffs within a three-minute span.

And it was the Wolfpack that missed enough tackles to allow the Blue Devils to run for 232 yards, almost twice its average before the game. And it was State which, after working all season to establish a running game, managed only a paltry 48 yards rushing, 106 less than it ground out against a far superior Virginia defense the week before.

It was also the Wolfpack which converted just two of 12 third down situations, including failing on a third-and-goal from the 1-yard line in the first quarter and two third-and-one situations in the second half. The Pack also came up empty on a fourth-and-one from the Duke 5-yard line in the second quarter.

All told, the Wolfpack went into the game as if it were 7-3 instead of 3-7.

"I don't know if it was so much being cocky," tight end Ralph Britt said. "We might have been a little too relaxed."

"We came out and played hard; we just had some problems."

Inside linebacker Pat Teague didn't think State overlooked the Blue Devils either.

"We try to respect each team the same," the Sanderson graduate said. "We go to them with the same approach. You've got to win them one game at a time."

Fortunately, you only lose them one game at a time as well, because State deserved a couple of losses for Saturday's performance. Were it not for a heroic performance from quarterback Erik Kramer (22 of 37 for a school-record 342 yards), the score would have been worse — much worse.

With star tailback Julius Grantham once again on the sidelines due to an injury, Duke chucked any attempt at running outside early. Instead, Blue Devil coach Steve Sloan turned to an assortment of draw and trap plays that proved surprisingly effective.

"We didn't prepare for the run as much this week as we normally do," Teague said. "We were expecting different calls. They just outguessed us."

Tailback Stanley Monk gained 104 yards on 21 carries and combined with fullback Tracy Smith (85 yards on 19 carries) to give Duke a heretofore-unknown potent rushing attack.

"Execution. It was just execution," defensive end Reggie Singletery said. "We didn't tackle well at all."

"We thought they would pass more. We really thought they would pass more."

By the time the Wolfpack defense finally came around, midway through the third quarter, the offense had already abandoned its game plan.

Washburn, Brown shine against Greeks

Phil Pitchford
Assistant Features Editor

After already scoring 22 points, sophomore Chris Washburn concluded his return to Reynolds Coliseum against the Greek National team Friday night with what will probably be known around campus for the next week as "The Dunk."

The Pack was leading comfortably with just under three minutes remaining in the game when the 6-11 Hickory native stole the ball just inside the midcourt line. Washburn got control of it, haphazardly dribbled the length of the court and, quite simply, attempted to tear the rim from the backboard.

The jam was only one of Washburn's eight assaults on the cylinder in the Pack's 90-69 runaway victory. After taking off from just inside the free throw line, Washburn tomahawked the ball viciously through the hoop, sending 9,500 fans into a frenzy and the noise meter in Reynolds skyrocketing.

Despite the lopsided score, coach Jim Valvano reminded reporters after the game that it will take time for the Pack to overcome the problems that accompany a youthful team.

"There's just no substitute for experience," he said. "We're young and we just need so much time to gain experience. The only way that they are going to get better and make proper decisions is to play."

Although Washburn shot 12 of 16 from the field, the big center didn't make a single trip to the free throw line. Against the John Salleys and Brad Daugherty's of the league, Washburn will have to become more aggressive and draw more fouls from opponents, Valvano said.

"He still does not have his mind set to go to the boards. He wants to fly; he wants to go after it and take off. He's more of an offensive threat in that regard, but we need somebody to go get the boards."

Another factor in turning just a promising season into a winning one will be the return of newcomers Tevin Binns and Charles Shackleford. Binns is nursing a severe ankle sprain and has not practiced in over a week, while freshman Shackleford must sit out this semester to concentrate on academics.

"We're young at critical positions and we need very much for those two to play," Valvano said. "We practice all year with (transfer Mike) Giomi and those two guys, and then we play our first time without that kind of size."

Until Binns and Shackleford return, Valvano will depend greatly on another freshman, Chucky Brown.

"Chucky Brown is just going to get better each time out as he plays," Valvano said. "He had a nice 5-for-6 shooting night, but he needs to get the boards that I think he's capable of."

"He's been playing well in practice but never played in a game yet. I felt he had to play in a game and show his teammates and everyone else that he might deserve to start."

After clawing their way to a 41-38 halftime lead, State shot a blistering 64.5 percent from the field in the second half to outdistance the Greeks. After the game, Valvano credited the Pack's aggressive man-to-man defense for the turnaround.

"The kids are young and enthusiastic, and they go after it," Valvano said. "In the first half, I think it shocked some of the guys who often the Greeks let fly. The fact they only scored 31 points in the second half says that we did a little better job."

Such defense also enabled State to move to a more up-tempo game in the second half, according to reserve guard Vinny Del Negro, who came off the bench to score 11 points.

"They were real hot, but we started playing more pressure defense in the second half and it gave them problems," he said. "Their shooting just fell down a little bit and we started hitting."

Del Negro himself did some of the "hitting," knocking in three outside jumpers in the second half. As opposed to last season when he was a hesitant freshman, Del Negro shot with confidence. The difference? Experience and hard work.

"Hitting a 20-foot jumper in practice is no problem, but when there are 13,000 people out there, there's a little more pressure," he said. "After losing Terry (Gannon), we definitely needed a shooter, so I worked hard on it."

"Since (opponents) are going to be sagging in on Washburn so much this year, somebody has got to be consistent outside in hitting the 'J.' I've got confidence right now and it's going in."

Senior Ernie Myers also dropped in three baskets in the second half after shooting one for seven in the first half. Myers said he "got into the flow" after halftime and received a little added incentive when Valvano went with freshman Kelsey Weems to start off the second half.

"He started a new lineup, so I started thinking, 'Well, I better get out there and do something.' I just tried to come in and spark the team, and that's what I did."

"The Greeks were really physical. I thought I'd be able to drive a lot, but they really cut off the lanes quick. I'm ready to play against some Americans."

Waggoner takes Picks contest

It's over, and the winner is (drum roll, please) — Richard Waggoner. Waggoner correctly picked 18 of the 20 games, as did Greg Russell, but Waggoner won in the tiebreaker by picking 45 points to Russell's 38. Both were foiled by the Wolfpack's unexpected loss to Duke, while Waggoner picked Air Force to dump Brigham Young and Russell chose Georgia to drop Auburn.

When notified of his victory, Waggoner, a doctorate candidate in chemistry, dropped a potion he was working on and suffered severe third degree burns over the bottom half of his body. Waggoner could be heard screaming, but we don't know if it was pain or joy.

Over 180 entries piled into Technician's offices last week, and four turned up with records of 8-12. We thought it in the interest of good sportsmanship to name these entries as well: Sherrie Knott, Barbara Fraser, Mike Daniels and Derek Proctor.

Spikers nip Duke, sweep Rutgers

From staff reports

State's charging volleyball team evened its record with wins Thursday and Friday nights in its last two matches of the regular season. The Pack downed Rutgers in three straight and was an upset winner in five games over Duke.

Friday night, the Pack took a quick, decisive 15-3, 15-4, 15-7 victory over the Scarlet Knights. The Pack's record now stands at 16-16 overall and 5-2 in the Atlantic Coast Conference heading into the league tournament this weekend in Chapel Hill.

Thursday night, the Pack traveled to Durham a decided underdog but returned to Raleigh an upset winner over the Blue Devils, who were previously unbeaten in conference play. The Pack, which already had lost to Duke twice this year, took the match into five games, 9-15, 15-8, 2-15, 15-11, 15-10.

Wolfpack coach Judy Martino got a little scared from the Devils after her team lost two of the first three games.

"The third game was a scary one. I wondered if we would come back and win two straight," she said.

"The Duke match was a real pleasant surprise. To go five games with Duke and beat them in five is tremendous. They've got excellent athletes and a lot of depth, something we don't have... I think we played good defense, and we turned around and attacked them without being intimidated."
