King festival a success

Late leader honored at McKimmon Center

By Andrew Means
Staff Writer

More than 900 people attended the second annual Martin Luther King Jr. Cultural Festival held at the McKimmon Center Saturday.

The theme of this year's program was "Developing Human Potential: The Legacy of Martin Luther King Jr." The festival, which featured seminars, workshops, and a cultural concert, was held in cooperation with N.C. State University, Shaw University and Saint Augustine's College.

Bruce Kinston, chairman of this year's event, said the event's main purpose was "to honor the memory of the late Martin Luther King Jr. and to develop human potential in keeping with his legacy."

Kinston said Saturday's festival also featured seminars for younger people. Topics of discussion included role-modeling, learning activities, psychological development and spiritual understanding. The festival's workshops included tapes of King's famous speeches, a storybook for pre-teens, and a brief history of NCSU, Shaw, and St. Augustine's.

The festival concluded Saturday night with a concert before a capacity crowd in Stewart Theatre.

Rev. Martin Carter, who has been involved with the festival both years, said the event's continued success will help promote the holiday. "As the celebration gets better organized, more and more people will attend," Rev. Carter said. "It has grown considerably because people are becoming more aware of the holiday and the importance of implicating the dream of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr."

Kinston said he wished to thank all the volunteers and organizations that helped run the festival for "showing their pride of our heritage in order to keep his dream alive today."

Grants to be given

Students may get $5,000 per year

A statewide teacher education program is expected to bring about 50 four year scholarships to N.C. State University each year, a School of Education official said.

Associate Dean Robert Williams said about 50 students will come to the university on the $20,000 awards, which are offered through the education school as part of the North Carolina Teaching Fellows Program.

NCSU is one of nine universities cooperating in the statewide scholarship program designed to attract top students into the teaching profession in North Carolina's public schools.

The school will operate a special program of enrichment activities beginning next fall for freshman teacher education students chosen to participate in the Teaching Fellows Program. Williams said the activities will include guest lectures, group cultural events and one-on-one tutoring in public schools.

"We want to build some cohesiveness and esprit amongst these future teachers," Williams said.

Interested high school students must have submitted their scholarship applications by last Friday. Local and regional screening committees review the applications and interview applicants during the next three months, and the winners will be notified by May 10.

Between 400 and 500 scholarships will be awarded next year to high school seniors, depending on how much money the 1987 General Assembly allocates for the Teaching Fellows Program. Williams said.

"When 500 a year finish their education and get into school systems, they're going to have an impact on improving instruction, improving conditions in the schools and improving the status of teachers," Williams said.

NCSU also stands to benefit from the program, he added. "If we get 50 the first year and then 50 the next year, it won't be long before we have a very substantial presence of these highly committed people, and that really excites us," Williams said.

Scholarships will be awarded on the basis of high school grade point average and class rank, leadership qualities, career intent, willingness

Student Center to get King portrait

By Calvin Hall
Staff Writer

In honor of the national holiday celebrating the birth of the late Martin Luther King Jr., Kappa Alpha Psi fraternity, in conjunction with the N.C. State University chapter of the NAACP, will present a portrait of the civil rights leader to the university to be hung in the Student Center.

The painting is the work of Durham native William Nash, a professional artist who has done much work in the region. The portrait took six months to complete.

Presentation of the painting to the university not only represents the commemoration of the national holiday honoring King's birthday, but it is also a gift from Kappa Alpha Psi fraternity. According to Kappa Alpha Psi fraternity vice-president Marvin Creedle, the gift is dedicated to the cultural enrichment of the university.

"We wanted to do something to commemorate the holiday that would be for all students," Creedle said.

"We donated it to the Student Center specifically because the Student Center is the focus of cultural life on campus," he said.

A ceremony officially presenting the painting to the university will be held Tuesday in Stewart Theatre. Atlanta native and NAACP regional president Harold Blake will be the guest speaker of the ceremony.

The program also features Dance Visions and the University Student Fellowship Choir. Everyone is invited to attend.

Alpha Week events begin tonight

'Unity and concern for another' theme for week-long celebration

By Dwan June
News Editor

The Eta Omicron chapter of Alpha Phi Alpha kicks off a series of events marking Alpha Week tonight with the theme centering around "unity and concern for another," said fraternity member Kevin Howell.

The week-long event begins with a 7:30 p.m.

march from the Cultural Center to Stewart Theatre. Howell said the march will show the appreciation for the accomplishments of Martin Luther King, Jr. and prove that "this man didn't die in vain."

On Tuesday, Alpha Phi Alpha will present the film Amazing Grace at 6 p.m. in the Cultural Center. The fraternity will display the awards they captured during last year's state convention Wednesday from 10:30 a.m. to 2 p.m. in the Student Center lobby.

Thursday at 7:30 p.m., Alpha Phi Alpha will hold its 1987 Smoker in 204 Poe Hall. The smoker is open to anyone who is interested in pledging to the fraternity or just interested in Alpha Phi Alpha. Formal dress is required.

Everyone is invited to attend the fraternity's party at Fever's Friday beginning at 10 p.m. Admission to the party is $4.

Anti-apartheid march today

A student march protesting N.C. State's financial involvement in South Africa will begin outside the Cultural Center at 11:55 a.m. today and end at the Bell tower.

Student leaders said that the march would focus attention on efforts to divest NCSU's Endowment Fund of $1.26 million worth of stock in companies with South African operations. The Student and Campus Affairs Committee of the NCSU Board of Trustees will meet Friday to discuss the divestment issue.

The march, which will be led by heads of student government and campus organizations, will serve "to show our unity and support of divesting the university's holdings of companies in South Africa," said Student Body President Gary Mauney. "We hope other students will join us."

Mauney said divestiture petitions will be circulated at the end of the march, which should last 30-40 minutes. There may also be a rally and speeches, but Mauney said Sunday that there were no definite plans yet.

NAMA Career Fair held today; 34 companies represented

The National Agriculture Marketing Association (NAMA) will sponsor a Career Fair today starting at 10 a.m. and lasting until 4 p.m. Thirty-four companies will be present to talk to students about business opportunities in the job market.

Each personal director from the various companies will give more exposure to agricultural business areas while also giving helpful business hints.

"The career fair will inform students of the types of jobs in these companies," said George Bostick, faculty advisor for NAMA. "It is a wonderful opportunity for students to find out what kinds of people they hire."

Membership into NCSU's three-year old NAMA Club is open to students in all majors. NAMA, a career oriented club, has 31 universities student-active clubs nationwide.

Erosion and sedimentation topic of week-long workshop

Advanced techniques for controlling erosion and sedimentation will be discussed at a week-long workshop Jan. 26-30 at N.C. State University's McKimmon Center.

The workshop, entitled Advanced Design for Erosion and Sedimentation Control, is designed for practicing professionals, such as private and public engineers, architects and surveyors, who develop such control plans.

It is sponsored by the N.C. Sedimentation Control Commission, the University of North Carolina Water Resources Research Institutes and the Land Quality Section of the N.C. Division of Land Resources.

The workshop will include sessions on hydrologic principles, vegetative ground cover, culvert and sediment basin, energy dissipators, stabilization of open channels, computer applications and the appropriate use of devices and structures. Also included will be an open forum discussion of special erosion and sedimentation design problems and reviews of sample plans.

The sessions will be presented by government, university and private design and construction professionals. Notebooks and instructional materials will be provided, and participants may bring specific problems for group discussion.

Registration fee for the workshop is $35. For more information call James Stewart at 737-2815.

Teaching Fellows gives scholarships to students to teach in areas of teacher shortages, scores on the SAT and "teaching personality," Williams said. Special consideration will be given to minorities. "Because it's competitive, we expect some of these students to be academically stronger than the students that we've been drawing without this incentive," Williams said. "One of the reasons that excites us is because of the national publicity that teacher education majors generally are below the mean of college academic standing. We see this as a wonderful opportunity to counteract that."

$5,000 per year for each of the four years in college. For each year they teach in a North Carolina public school after graduation, the state will forgive $5,000 of the award. After four years of teaching, the entire $20,000 Teaching Fellows award will be fully repaid. The Teaching Fellows Program was initiated by the Public School Forum of North Carolina, a non-profit group of business, political and educational leaders dedicated to improving public education in North Carolina. The program is by far the most ambitious program of its kind in the country," said John Dornan, the forum's executive director.

Heels out-pace Wolfpack

State's lame horses leave it at the gate in Dean Dome

By Tim Peeler
Sports Editor

CHAPEL HILL — State found out Sunday what happens if that beer wagon doesn't have its Clydesdales. It doesn't go anywhere.

Playing without two key frontcourt players, State was outmanned here by North Carolina, 96-78, in the Wolfpack's first visit to the Dean Dome.

Both center Charles Shackelford and forward Chuckie Brown sat hurting and helpless on the sidelines and watched the third-ranked Tar Heels, with big freshman J.R. Reid, dominate offensive and defensive inside play.

"You need your horses to beat a Carolina," Wolfpack guard Vinny Del Negro said.

Both Brown and Shackelford were injured in last week's game against Wake Forest and did not see action in the contest, though both were dressed in game uniforms.

"We can't lose a Shackelford or a Brown and play as well as we have been, especially against this caliber of team," said State coach Jim Valvano, whose team fell to 3-2 in the ACC and 11-4 overall.

Little-used reserve Tevin Binns, a 6-10 junior college transfer was flung into the starting lineup for the first time in his two-year stay at State and forced to play head-up with Carolina's Joe Wolf.

The Tar Heels, now 4-0 in the conference and 15-1 overall, took advantage of the absence of an experienced big man in the Wolfpack lineup, feeding the ball to hotshot freshman Reid. The 6-foot-9 forward scored a record-setting 31 points and grabbed 13 rebounds.

Wolf added 20 points and 10 rebounds to the effort.

The Tar Heel big men controlled the offensive and defensive boards, especially in the first half. UNC had more offensive boards than the Wolfpack had total rebounds in the first half. For the game, Tar Heel rebounders got nearly twice as many caroms as State, 45-23.

The two teams played evenly for the first nine minutes, with the Wolfpack taking as much as a four-point lead at times.

But at the 11:06 mark, Carolina's thoroughbreds took over, leaving the Wolfpack riding junk-cart pullers.

With State ahead, 25-23, Reid scored a pair of baskets and two free throws, then all-America point guard Kenny Smith canned a three-pointer and the Tar Heels were off and running to a 22-8 scoring burst. State was only able to hit one field goal in the final 11 minutes of the first period, spending most of its offensive time at the free throw line.

The Wolfpack made 11 of 12 free throws during that stretch, but continued to lose ground to the streaking Heels. UNC took a 15-point lead into the locker room.

Binns, who said he didn't know he was starting until five minutes before the game, committed four fouls in the first half and fouled out of the game a minute and a half into the second period.

"I wasn't really prepared like I should have been," said Binns who scored seven points to go with his five rebounds.

State tried to nose its way back into the race at the beginning of the second half with the transition game of Drummond and Del Negro. Freshman Avie Lester filled in for Binns, and his rebounding helped State close the gap.

The Pack outscored the Tar Heels 16-8, cutting the lead to 61-54, before running out of oats.

"We just got tired," Del Negro said. "We didn't have the depth up front we needed."

State blew two chances to cut UNC's lead to five at the 14:20 mark, as Bolton walked on one trip down the court and missed a 14-footer the next trip down.

As the Heels coasted to the finish line, State sort of wheezed home.

"We were absolutely exhausted at the end of the game," Valvano said. "We simply got tired. Giomi and Tevin had to play a lot of minutes. The other two bodies (Shackelford and Brown) would certainly have helped."

Overall, Valvano was pleased with his team's effort — considering the circumstances.

"I thought we played as hard as we possibly could," he said. "At times we didn't play very well, but from tap to buzzer we played hard. We did the best we could considering the circumstances. I was pleased with the effort, but not the outcome."

"We'll be better for playing the way we did today."

Point guard Kenny Drummond tries to penetrate Carolina's defense in Sunday's 96-78 loss to the Tar Heels. Drummond had 20 points, five assists and five steals in the game.

Shack, Brown lame

CHAPEL HILL — Neither starter Charles Shackelford nor reserve Chuckie Brown played in Sunday's 96-78 loss to North Carolina, and the two sophomores may not be available in Wednesday night's contest against Duke.

Coach Jim Valvano said after the game that the status of both players, who injured ankles in Thursday's win over Wake Forest, was still questionable.

"Even if they were able to play Wednesday, they probably won't be able to practice," Valvano said. "I don't feel good about kids not practicing and then playing."

Though both were dressed out for the UNC game and participated in pre-game drills, both were on crutches Friday and Saturday. They were limping noticeably during warm-up drills.

Valvano said playing Shackelford, the team's best rebounder and second leading scorer, would not have been intelligent.

"It would have been a very unwise move," Valvano said. "It would have been an emotional move. I would have made a bad decision for the kid. I mean, he was on crutches yesterday."

Valvano said Brown's condition was a little better than Shackelford's.

"Chuckie is better physically than Shack and may play against Duke," Valvano said.

Shackelford was the Wolfpack's top rebounder and second leading scorer, prior to the game, averaging 8.3 boards and 14.0 points a game.

Brown, a top reserve, averages 3.9 rebounds and 6.3 points a game.

North Carolina's J.R. Reid scored 31 points and picked up 13 rebounds to lead the Tar Heels to a 96-78 win over State.

Dean Smith's newest star

By Katrina Waugh
Assistant Sports Editor

CHAPEL HILL — Dean Smith has found a new big man to fill the void left by Brad Daugherty — freshman forward J.R. Reid showed off his talent and potential in the Tar Heels' 96-78 win over the Wolfpack at the Dean Dome Sunday.

"His performance was his best to date," North Carolina coach Dean Smith said. "If I were him I would try to carry Kenny Smith and Jeff Lebo's bags when we go on trips for the passes they gave him. But he still had to score."

Reid, who averaged 11.2 points and 7.4 rebounds before Sunday's game, scored 31 points and pulled down 13 rebounds against the Wolfpack.

Reid's 31 points tied a Tar Heel freshman scoring record. The only other Heels to score as much in a game during their freshman campaign were Walter Davis, who had 31 in UNC's overtime win over Duke in 1974, and Mike O'Koren, who had 31 in Carolina's overtime win over UNLV in the semi-finals of the 1977 NCAA tournament.

Both Davis and O'Koren are currently active in the professional ranks. Davis was named rookie of the year in 1978 and has been an NBA all-Star five times.

"Reid was great," State coach Jim Valvano said. "He's a really great basketball player."

Reid connected on 13 of his 14 shots from the floor and five of his seven free throw attempts.

"We were able to get him the ball inside and he was able to score," Smith said.

All but one of Reid's buckets were from within three feet of the basket, as were most of the Tar Heels' shots.

"He has a nice touch around the basket," Wolfpack guard Vinny Del Negro said.

Reid is Carolina's leading rebounder with 123 grabs this season.

"I thought he really did a good job on the boards," Smith said. "Of course Lester was guarding him instead of Shackelford and that helped."

"(He is) a dominating big man," Valvano said. "He has great presence around the basket. Good mits. He has really good hands."

Reid is also tough on the defensive end of the court. He's Carolina's second-leading shot blocker behind Dave Popson with 16 blocks. He has 18 steals so far this season. He had two steals and two blocked shots, along with eight defensive rebounds in Sunday's game.

"He moves great," said State's Tevin Binns, who fouled out early in the game defending Reid. "He's got really good hands."

Reid isn't a superstar yet, Smith is quick to point out. He collected four personal fouls and seven turnovers and had only one assist Sunday, and he's a freshman. He'll improve with age.

"Recently he's come on strong," Smith said. "He's getting confidence. He's learning, but he's already a man when he gets the ball low."

"He's getting better and better," Valvano said.

Joe Cesari has managed to combine a 4.0 grade point average with a 16-1 record this season. He is ranked number ten in the nation in the 142-pound division.

Successful student-athlete Wrestler performs well in school and on the mat

Deron Johnson
Sports Writer

Being a college athlete has not been easy in recent years. With drug and academic scandals thrust into the national spotlight, the terms student and athlete hardly seemed synonymous.

But at State, sophomore wrestler Joe Cesari is doing his part to change the tarnished image of the collegiate athlete.

A dean's list student majoring in industrial engineering, Cesari has an overall grade point average far above 3.0 and finished the fall semester with a perfect 4.0.

The red-shirt sophomore has been almost as perfect on the mats as he has been in the classroom, compiling a 16-1 record, boosting him to a No. 10 national ranking in the 142-pound division.

One major reason for Cesari's climb toward the top in the country was his performances in the Navy.

Starting as a freshman, Cesari worked his way to a 10-10 record but was hampered by an elbow injury and consequently decided to sit out the rest of the season but not simply because of the injury.

"I wanted to take a year to improve myself in wrestling and take a heavier academic load and work on my grades," Cesari said.

To be both a student and an athlete takes a lot of discipline, especially if one expects to be good at both. What may have helped Cesari's success in both areas is his family's wrestling tradition.

Cesari wrestled under his father, Joe Sr., at North Schuylkill High in Ashland, Pennsylvania, where he won three state championships while achieving an 80-4 record. But he said he felt no pressure competing under his father's tutelage.

"It wasn't difficult to wrestle for my father," Cesari said. "He didn't have to push me any harder to be good. I wanted to do it for him. Him

Joe Cesari

Guzzo believes Joe Cesari's success and dedication stem directly from his father.

"The father is the biggest influence on how Joe has come along. Everything starts with him," Guzzo said. "Joe has outstanding character and is highly motivated academically. He uses his intelligence and applies it to wrestling. With all the negative things that have been going on in college athletics, Joe and Steve are bright spots to everyone."

Cesari appears to have no trouble meeting his academic goals for the season, but he has set even loftier, but hardly impossible, athletic goals for himself and the 11th-ranked Wolfpack.

"As for the team, we use the regular season to get ready for the ACC and NCAA tournaments which we hope to win," Cesari said. "Personally, anytime you're wrestling on a national level, and have come as far as I have, you have to be looking for a national championship, and that's my goal for this year. If not this year, then I have two more shots at it, so it's both my long and short term goal."

— Joe Cesari

Anytime you're wrestling on a national level, and you have come as far as I have, you have to be looking for a national championship, and that's my goal for this year. If not this year then I have two more shots at it, so it's both my long and short term goal.

Lehigh, and Wilkes Open wrestling tournaments, the most prestigious wrestling events in the East. He won all three and was named Outstanding Wrestler at the Navy Invitational Tournament.

Despite his outstanding showing so far this season, Cesari still places academics before athletics, a priority demonstrated by his reasons for choosing State and deciding to red-shirt as a freshman.

"First of all I chose State because I wanted to go into engineering and this school has a good reputation as an engineering university," Cesari said. "Second of all, State has a good wrestling tradition and is a perennial Top 20 team and with (Wolfpack head coach Bob) Guzzo's philosophy I felt I would fit in well with this program."

being the coach made me want to work harder to make myself and the team better."

Steve Cesari, one of Joe's younger brothers and a freshman wrestler for the Wolfpack, also won a state championship under their father and now shares an apartment with his brother and several other wrestlers at State. Steve, a business major, also has an average above 3.0 and sports a 4-1 record in the 158-pound weight class despite being hampered by an injury this season.

The Cesari tradition doesn't end with Joe and Steve. There is Mark, a sophomore in high school who is already receiving rave reviews from Guzzo, who hopes to lure Pennsylvania's top-ranked and undefeated 138-pounder to State in a few years.

Wrestlers face Heels Monday

By Chris Wilson
Staff Writer

The Wolfpack Wrestling team faces one of its toughest matches of the season Monday night when they do battle with North Carolina in Chapel Hill. Both teams are ranked in the Top 20, with Carolina at No. 5 and State at No. 11.

State currently owns a 6-2 overall record and the Tar Heels, coming off a 34-9 thrashing of Appalachian State Saturday, are 10-4.

The Wolfpack has had well over a week to heal the wounds from its last competition in the Virginia Duals last weekend. State lost two of three in the prestigious tournament and suffered several injuries.

"We're really plagued with injuries right now," Wolfpack coach Bob Guzzo said. "We suffered a few injuries in the Virginia Duals and will be using some subs from the 150 weight class up to the heavy-weight. We'll know a little better Monday who will be able to play."

Mike Baker is the only starter over 150 pounds who will wrestle. Both teams are loaded with nationally prominent talent.

The Wolfpack has several key wrestlers with impressive credentials. David Schneiderman, at 134-pounds, has only one loss, that in the Lehigh Invitational Tournament. Mark Sodano, ranked fourth nationally, owns a 17-3 record.

Scott Turner, who is 5-0 this year, is ranked second in the nation, but has been hampered by a knee injury. Baker is also wrestling well right now, recently winning in the Virginia Duals.

The Tar Heels have two top-ranked wrestlers leading their charge. All-America Al Palacio, ranked first in the country at 118-pounds, owns a 28-0 record and junior all-America Rob Koll, No. 1 at 167-pounds, is 28-1.

Guzzo, whose team lost to the Tar Heels twice in the regular season last year and finished second to UNC in the ACC tournament, expects the matchup between the two teams to be hotly contested.

"Although we are a little banged up at this point, we still have a very good chance of defeating Carolina," said Guzzo. "We just have to have a good match."

Cavaliers outdistance women tankers

By Scott Deuel
Staff Writer

The Wolfpack Women's swimming and diving team staged a comeback of sorts Saturday afternoon, but fell short, losing to Virginia, 77-63.

State fought back from a 25-point deficit, getting as close as 54-43, before falling to the nationally ranked Cavaliers.

Wolfpack coach Don Easterling was pleased with the women's efforts.

"We fought back and did not give up," Easterling said. "Virginia is definitely one of the best teams in the country, and I'm more pleased with our team effort in this loss than in the win over Maryland last week."

"To come back the way we did is obviously indicative of a tremendous effort."

Christi MacMillan starred for the Pack, placing first in the 200 fly with a time of 2:08.80, and Michelle Mumm came in second in 2:11.48.

Freshman Julie Pananen improved in the 1000 freestyle, placing second with a time of 10:27.95.

JoAnn Emerson finished third in the 100 freestyle in 54.47 seconds.

"JoAnn works really hard and she seems to be improving every day," Easterling said.

Christina DeKraay helped the Pack's effort, coming in second in the 200 backstroke with a time of 2:10.70.

Asa Nordin won the 200 breaststroke for the Wolfpack with a time of 2:26.08, and Holly Kloos placed second in 2:30.39.

MacMillan put in another good performance for the Wolfpack in the 500 freestyle event, finishing a close second behind Hallin of Virginia with a time of 5:03.71.

The Wolfpack finished out the meet by winning the free relay, with Maya Codelli, Melinda Moxin, Emcason and Susan Butcher winning the event in one minute and 40.96 seconds.

The Wolfpack divers had a good showing, but ended up losing to Virginia 69 to 55.

In one-meter diving, the Pack placed first, second and third.

Joan Thompson finished first with 229.13 points. Natalie O'Meara finished second with 224.78 points and Lindy Plummer was third with 223.09 points.

In the three-meter diving, Plummer won the competition with a score of 263.18, and O'Meara came in second with 259.05 points.

Out of eight events, we have only been beaten once," diving coach John Candler said. "Our record is 7-1 as a diving team."

Candler believes that much of the success the divers have enjoyed has resulted from hard work.

"I really feel the main reason for our success is everyone is willing to work, but we really follow through on our commitment to training. Five days a week and one day on the weekend we work out, with training consisting of running bleachers daily and lifting weights," Candler said.

Candler believes his women's team can qualify for the NCAAs.

"All the girls have qualified for the zones, and our zone is zone three in Louisiana State. From there, seven divers qualify for the national championships."

The divers who have qualified for the zones are freshmen Thompson, Plummer, Diane Prosser, and sophomore O'Meara.

Plummer, who is from Halifax, Nova Scotia, has international experience which will help her prepare for ACC competition.

Candler stressed that the diving team is like a family. He was particularly pleased with the divers' academic successes.

"Two of our girls placed dean's list, and two other girls were extremely close," Candler said. "I'm very proud of that fact."

State's swimming team will next face South Carolina on Jan. 23, and then compete against powerhouse Clemson, ranked sixth in the nation, the next day.

"South Carolina's women's team is as good as we are," Easterling said. "I feel it will be a stern test for us. Clemson will definitely provide us with a challenge, and they definitely outmatch us in talent."

State's record falls to 1-3 in the ACC and 3-3 overall.

"The Virginia team is definitely the best in the conference," Easterling said. "They have a lot of depth, and I really cannot see them having any weak spots. I just feel our kids are not mentally or physically mature enough at this point."

In the 400 medley relay, Steve Bradshaw, Nikos Fokianos, Chuck Niemeyer and Benton Satterfield placed second with a time of 3:29.13.

In the 200 freestyle, Andy Creaiger finished second with a time of 1:44.32.

Gianfranco Grondonia placed second in the 200 fly in 1:57.47.

The Wolfpack was victorious in the 100 free, as Dan Judge claimed first in 47.68 seconds and Scott Fredrick finished second in 48.35 seconds.

The Pack also won the 200 breast, with Fokianos having a winning time of 2:12.07, and Curt Klausner and Onno Schild placing second and third respectively for State.

"We did well in the 100 and 200 free, and I feel Nikos Fokianos is the most improved for his position in the country," Easterling said.

In diving, Tom Whitted came in first in the 1 meter event, with a score of 293.48. He also finished first in the 3-meter boards, achieving a score of 344.25. Whitted is a freshman from Munster, Indiana, who won the National Junior College Championships in the 1 meter competition last year.

The defeat was particularly unsettling for the Pack, as it was only the second time in history that Virginia has defeated State in conference competition.

State will next meet South Carolina Jan. 23 and Clemson the following day.

Opinion

A paper that is entirely the product of the student body becomes, at once the official organ through which the thoughts, the acts, and in fact the very life of the campus are registered. It is the mirrorpiece through which the students themselves talk. College life without its journal is blank.

Martin Luther King; marching on racism

Today, a federal holiday for Martin Luther King Jr., should be a time of reflection, commitment and change.

First and foremost, students unfamiliar with the Nobel prize winner's work, as well as those who are familiar with King's struggle for black equality, should attend the various educational activities held today.

The campus population should remember the importance of King's work in history, which brought changes in the attitudes and behavior of both blacks and whites.

Through non-violent protests, King and the black movement forced the oppressive and often tyrannical white lawmakers to adopt laws which guaranteed equal rights.

However, the fight has not ended. Everyone knows of the racist regime of South Africa. Now the non-violent movement is toward divestment of companies that do business in South Africa. By divesting, an institution says it does not support racism through trade.

Yet, some people do not believe divestment will help resolve the conflict; instead, they suggest that it will hurt blacks economically while creating wide-spread political unrest in the country.

These arguments are simply illogical. Less than one percent of the employed blacks work for American manufacturers. Furthermore, 30 percent of economically active blacks are currently employed in South Africa. As for political unrest, the country currently has an uncertain future.

Students will be marching today from the Cultural Center, located on West Dunn and Dan Allen Drive, to the Bell Tower and Holladay Hall. The march symbolizes the commitment to abolish apartheid.

But that is not all a student can do. People should not single out South Africa as an isolated country of racism. It is not.

Racism exists in America, as demonstrated by the actions of the Ku Klux Klan in Forsyth County in Georgia.

When blacks and whites marched in a show of brotherhood in the all-white county, Klan members threw rocks and bottles at the marchers. Coretta King said she could not comprehend how a racist act as this could happen in this day and age.

Closer to home, the White Patriot Party marched in downtown Raleigh Sunday to protest the King holiday. This group, like the Klan, feeds on the ignorance and racist attitudes of whites. Enlightened students should band together to fight the influence of these groups.

But the Klan's action does have a positive side. It reminds Americans that they have a long road to walk before racism becomes a thing of the past. People cannot hope that racism will disappear while they sit idle. The only way racism can be defeated is by actively standing up and confronting it.

Take an active part in today's demonstration. The time has come to show your peers on the campus, in the country and in the world that N.C. State University will not tolerate racism.

Don't march for Martin Luther King. Instead, march for what Martin Luther King accomplished.

A change in role

Many students may have noticed that the North Campus Bookstore is not what it used to be. It has a few sale books on the shelves, but mainly the bookstore is stocking paper, pens, magazines and snacks.

According to Students Supply Stores, selling textbooks for evening courses there turned out not to be as good an idea as first believed.

Having evening textbooks in two locations created inefficiencies. If one store sold out of a title, the delay necessitated by transferring more books from the other store confused everybody.

Now all textbooks are at the main store, which is staying open late the first few days of classes.

However, removing textbooks from the North Campus Bookstore created an identity problem.

We agree with SSS manager Bob Armstrong that the store's role needs to be redefined. The SSS plans marketing surveys to improve the North Campus Store.

Armstrong said the store needs a major identifying factor to cause excitement and draw people in.

We agree. Further, we would like to see the store's library location used advantageously.

The library draws traffic from students and faculty doing research day and night. We wonder if this might be an appropriate place for scholarly and technical books, highlighted by some bestsellers.

Also, we wonder if the SSS could work with departments and with the library to provide a videocassette sales and rental service.

Particularly with rentals, but also with bestselling books, we are less interested in current releases than in timeless classics, like Sir Laurence Olivier's Hamlet, that could increase the availability of media services throughout the university.

There are many possibilities, and all of them must lead to a self-supporting store. But we feel that a North Campus Store that is simply a convenience store lacks significance.

AT NORTH HALL THE ROOMS WERE NOT EQUIPPED WITH THE DESKS THAT RESIDENCE LIFE PROMISED.

Quit spending and start working

During debate in the House and Senate chambers in 1983 over whether America should observe a national holiday honoring Martin Luther King Jr., accusations ran rampant that anyone who was opposed to the holiday was a racist. This in itself was a form of bigotry, since those against the holiday had many valid reasons for their opposition.

Every American, regardless of race, color, religion, sex, national origin or physical handicap, should be judged on the basis of their talents and merits. And King certainly did a lot during his life to assure the protection of civil rights for minorities. But even if King did more for this particular cause than anyone else has ever done, does that justify overlooking the efforts of many other Americans who worked equally hard for equally honorable causes to specifically honor King alone? Some have said that this holiday will serve as a day to remember all great Americans who have worked to further civil rights. Then why isn't the holiday known as "National Civil Rights Day?" Abraham Lincoln was the President who issued the Emancipation Proclamation, freeing the slaves in America. When Lincoln was assassinated, did he die for whites only, or for Americans of all colors? Why does Lincoln not have a national holiday in his name?

The list of men and women in

JEFF STILES

James Madison was the father of our United States Constitution. Was the drafting of our Constitution less honorable a work than the one King did? But we don't have a national holiday honoring Madison. Thomas Jefferson was the author of our Declaration of Independence, which announced our freedom from the tyranny of the British. He is not honored with a holiday. Booker T. Washington did great work to improve the education of blacks in America, thus improving their lives drastically. Was his a less honorable work than that of King? Franklin Delano Roosevelt was one of the most influential presidents that America has ever had, and because of this, he was able to work to improve the lives of all American people. In particular, Roosevelt did a lot to encourage development of a vaccine against polio, the disease that had stricken him as a child and paralyzed him for life. Is helping to prolong the lives of the crippled less important than the work King did?

American history who are worthy of great honor is very long. But if we had holidays for every American who did a great service to our country or who died in defense of our liberties, we would never be able to work. As a democratic senator from Nebraska said during debate on the King holiday, "This is a time in our history when we should go to work, not plan another day off."

Earlier this month the Congressional Budget Office announced that by the end of 1987 the U.S. will run deficits of $174.5 billion. According to the Library of Congress, paying federal, state and local government employees for a paid day off for the King holiday each year will cost $962 million in taxes. The U.S. Chamber of Commerce estimates a $4.3 billion cost to the private sector each year. Combined, this comes to a $500 billion cost to Americans during the next century.

Are Americans seriously expected to consider the work of King on this day? They don't think of Jesus Christ on Christmas, or war victims on Memorial Day or veterans on Veterans Day, so why would they remember Martin Luther King on the national holiday honoring him?

It's high time for Americans to get serious about working and about wasteful spending.

Free electives must be saved

Like the bald eagle and the humpback whale, free electives might soon become extinct. The choice for a student to take nine hours of whatever he wants is endangered because the university's Commission on Undergraduate Education has recommended that this privilege be eliminated.

Is this recommendation sound?

Are free electives important enough to an undergraduate education for students to fight for?

As it stands now, students must take approximately 125 hours required by the university and their major. Included in the university requirements are nine hours of free electives.

This current policy seems reasonable. Each student can take nine hours of free electives that count toward his degree. And although some students abuse this freedom, many others have used it to open doors, broaden horizons and test their aptitude in fields other than their declared major.

For example, Terry Martin, a former State student, was a senior majoring in chemistry when he took a free elective in journalism. Even though Mr. Martin had spent the preceding three years working toward a chemistry degree, this free elective caused him to switch his career objectives to journalism. He is now the Assistant City editor at the Winston Salem Journal.

Should not students continue to have the freedom to pick some courses without restrictions?

Furthermore, the Admissions Office asks that incoming students declare a major so they will at least have a direction. The school presently allows students to experiment and to change their minds if free electives are taken away, students may not have the necessary information on which to base their career. We need free electives so that students can make the best possible decisions.

Free electives can also be beneficial to those who enter State already knowing which major is best for them. Students who explore interests in art, ideas and life are good examples of why we need free electives. And because each individual is unique, students should continue to have some say in which areas to explore.

Granted, the university is completely within its rights to require certain classes. Studies have shown that many college graduates are indeed weak in vital areas such as art appreciation, communication skills and ethics. Therefore, it is a good idea to require these types of classes.

However, these requirements should not come at the expense of something as valuable as free electives. The elimination of excessive technical courses, a reduction in physical education classes (which has already been recommended by the commission) and a slightly reduced emphasis on majors are examples of reasonable methods to reach the commission's goal of providing students with a well-rounded education.

The goal of higher education is to open doors, not close minds. That is precisely why we must remain vigilant to ensure that our free electives are not eliminated.

Hypocrisy leaves sour taste in mouth

I am amused but also concerned that the leaders of the student body are planning a march to protest NCSU's involvement in South Africa. Certainly apartheid is no way to run a society, but the anti-apartheid protests at other colleges have really started to turn into a stupid spectacle. For college students to protest against South Africa is very stylish. They're doing it at Chapel Hill; why shouldn't we jump on the bandwagon? After all, the marches and imaginary shantytowns exist mainly for future yuppies to be able to tell their kids that they took part in a cause.

I question the sincerity of the participants because there are many things more worthy of condemnation that are completely ignored by college students. For example, consider Star Wars. The threat of our government squandering a trillion dollars on something that probably won't do us any good as Americans talking to the streets by the thousands. However, I don't see any parades forming on our campus to protest this foolish venture which will ruin our economy and defenses even when our own university is getting its hands filthy with funds from this source. This and many other issues far too numerous to mention in one letter affect us much more than the plight of South African blacks.

Americans who are more worried about apartheid than about Star Wars are either very stupid or blindly following a fad. Since college students by nature are not stupid, it must be the latter. In principle, there is nothing wrong with protesting against South Africa, but the hypocrisy surrounding the whole movement on campuses leaves a sour taste in my mouth. I urge the student leaders to use their time and energy in a more original and meaningful fashion.

Auditions set for Thompson play

Winston's award-winning 'Ma Rainey's Black Bottom' to make N.C. debut

Devin Steele
Senior Staff Writer

Auditions for Thompson Theatre's production of Ma Rainey's Black Bottom will be open to all students Monday, Jan. 26 and Tuesday, Jan. 27 at the theater. Auditions begin at 7:30 p.m. both days.

Ten actors — five black males, two black females and three white males — are needed to fill roles in August Wilson's production, an award-winning play making its North Carolina debut. The play will run from March 26-28 and April 1-4 at 8 p.m. each night.

Ma Rainey's Black Bottom, according to Director Patricia Caple, "deals with the lives of blacks during the 1920s and the frustrations they feel due to racism in America."

The play centers around Ma Rainey, the black rhythm and blues singer and the racial exploitation she and her entourage face, particularly during recording sessions.

"What August Wilson does is he sort of takes a segment of Black America and heaves it upon us and shows us what it does to its victims," Caple said. "It deals with the frustrations they feel due to racism in America. There is some music, showing very poignant and rhythmic black rage."

"The play has its moments — it's lyrical, funny at times... we can laugh and we can cry. It's very dramatic," Caple said.

Caple, an associate professor in the speech communication department, is in her first year at State. Prior to coming to State, she directed at Shaw University such plays as Melvin Van Peebles' Ain't Supposed to Die a Natural Death, James Baldwin's The Amen Corner, Langston Hughes' Simply Heavenly and Arthur Kopit's Old Dad, Poor Dad, Mama's Hung You In The Closet, And I'm Not Feeling So Good.

The play will be performed in conjunction with the Black Repertory Theatre and the University Players.

Caple said students need no theatrical experience to audition.

Two Thompson Theatre productions upcoming in February include a child favorite, Frog Pond, and The Runner Stumbles.

Frog Pond, making its eighth-straight appearance at Thompson, runs Feb. 5-6 at 7:30 p.m. and Feb. 7-8 at 2:30 p.m. Admission is $1 for State students (limit of two tickets per ID) and $2 for all others.

The play, according to Director Teri Janney, has been not only well received by children, but also has drawn a large student audience in the past.

"There's a lot of slapstick, a lot of falling down and chase scenes," Janney said.

The Runner Stumbles will be performed Feb. 12-14 and Feb. 17-21.

Huey Lewis and the News play Reynolds

By Joe Corey
Entertainment Editor

After a few years of silence, the sound of rock 'n' roll will ring through Reynolds Coliseum.

Huey Lewis and the News have been booked to play Reynolds on the night of Feb. 28.

Concert tickets cost $16.50 plus a service charge and will go on sale Jan. 29 for the general public.

Students should be able to purchase tickets for the show on Jan. 28, according to WRDU.

The athletics department had declared in the fall of 1984 that there would be no more rock concerts in Reynolds because of the number of non-students that showed up at the events compared to students.

Over the past year, several rock acts had been booked for Reynolds, but many were canceled by the performers. Most recently, Run-DMC, booked to play during the fall semester, canceled their tour to start production on their movie called Tougher Than Leather.

Huey Lewis and the News are touring to support their latest million-selling album, Fore. The record has spawned such memorable hits as "Hip to be Square" and "Stuck with You."

The band is from the San Francisco Bay area. They achieved minor success with their second album Picture This with songs "Do You Believe in Love" and "Working for the Weekend."

But the band broke out big with their third LP Sports. Huey Lewis and the News became regular MTV fodder with their videos for "I Want a New Drug," "Bad is Bad" and "Heart and Soul." The band performed an a cappella version of the "Star-Spangled Banner" at the Baseball All-Star game held in San Francisco's Candlestick Park.

The two songs the band performed for the soundtrack of Michael J. Fox's smash summer movie Back to the Future, "Power of Love" and "Back in Time," became mega-hits and led to a performance on the Grammy Awards.

Recently Lewis produced a couple of tracks for Bruce Hornsby and the Range best-selling record The Way It Is.

For further ticket information, call Reynolds Coliseum box office at 737-2106 or WRDU at 860-1061.

NCSU alumnus flying high after Air Force promotion

By Randall Martin
Staff Writer

Virgil Batten

An N.C. State alumnus has soared to a new height in his three-decade Air Force career, recently receiving a new and important command appointment.

Colonel Virgil Batten assumed duties on Nov. 1 as chief of staff, Headquarters, Air Force Reserve. Batten assumes the position after a three-year stint as chief of staff, Headquarters, 14th Air Force, at Dobbins Air Force Base in Georgia.

The colonel is a 1960 graduate of State with a bachelor of science degree in forestry. He later earned a masters degree in business administration in 1975 from Webster College in St. Louis.

In receiving this assignment, the scope of his former duties and responsibilities increases threefold. "I'll be supervising and coordinating the headquarters staff agencies for the vice commander," said the 26-year Air Force veteran. "In addition, I'll be involved with projects and activities throughout the command, which encompasses more than 70,000 people at 500 field units in the continental United States, Alaska, Hawaii and Guam."

Colonel Batten is a command pilot with more than 5,500 flying hours, mostly in C-130 Hercules aircraft. He has flown several versions of the C-130, including weather reconnaissance and gunship models.

In 1963 while assigned to the 54th Weather Squadron, Anderson Air Force, Guam, he was credited with making the first typhoon penetration in the WC-130E aircraft.

During the Vietnam conflict, he flew 105 combat missions in AC-130 gunships and was chief of AC-130 aircrew standardization for the 8th Tactical Fighter Wing, Ubon Royal Thai Air Force Base, Thailand.

Though Batten has held many command and chief of staff positions since his return from Vietnam, he feels that this position may prove to be the most rewarding: "With almost every major Air Force Reserve unit undergoing modernization in either aircraft or facilities, it's a dynamic and exciting time to be in this position," he said.
