Artist's rendition of Daniels Hall annex.

New annex completion scheduled for April '88

By Marty Massey
Staff Writer

Construction has begun on the new Daniels Hall annex, a project which has been under actual construction since May 25, said W. T. Easter, associate head of the department of electrical and computer engineering.

"The scheduled completion date for the addition has been set for next April or May," Easter said. Original plans called for completion in September of 1987.

According to Easter, the addition will be connected to the main building by tearing through existing walls where corridors of the two buildings will meet.

"The additional space will give approximately 18,000 additional square feet to Daniels Hall," Easter said.

Easter said the growth of the department has been a major reason for building the annex.

"The program (electrical and computer engineering) has grown, more than doubled, since 1980," he said. "We are at a crisis state — we need the building right now."

A majority of the first floor will be reserved for a driveway into the existing loading area, the professor said. The present loading area will be encompassed on all four sides once the addition is completed.

Most of the rest of the first floor will be given to the computer science department as part of a trade-off between the two departments, he said.

The rest of the four floor annex will house fifteen faculty offices, two laboratories, a 1500-square foot undergraduate computer room, a 300-square foot mainframe room and eight general purpose rooms. Also additional restrooms for the handicapped will be available on the second, third, and fourth floors.

The addition, contracted to Ruffin Woody and Associates of Roxboro, will stand between Daniels and Withers Halls, but will leave room between the two buildings to maintain the pedestrian walkway and two existing elm trees in that walkway, the associate department head said.

"The new building will have a passenger freight elevator which will provide improved access for the handicapped to all four floors," Easter said.

One complication that arose during the planning phase involved the aligning of the floors correctly from the original building to the annex. Easter said, "They (the construction crews) will have to drop the level of the loading driveway approximately one and one-half feet below where it would have been."

Another complication arose in matching the white bands at the top of the building. A similar band of limestone would have been too expensive, Easter said. Therefore, newer material will be used in order to maintain the band around the building.

NCAA cost-cutting venture fails

Last week, the NCAA held a special convention where members voted on several measures proposed by the NCAA's Presidents' Commission designed to cut the cost of college athletics.

Among the proposals were measures reducing the number of assistant football coaches, reducing the number of scholarships available for non-revenue sports and limiting to 26 weeks the time that non-revenue sports teams could practice during the year.

All but one of the Presidents' Commission's proposals were voted down. The one remaining, to limit practice time, was watered down to exclude individual sports so that the country's Olympic hopefuls would not be limited to only 26 weeks of practice. In fact, this cost-cutting convention was so ineffective that a measure passed in January's regular convention reducing the number of basketball scholarships from 15 to 13 was repealed.

So it seems the NCAA spent countless thousands of dollars on a special "cost-cutting" convention, then voted not to implement any of the cost-cutting measures. It doesn't take an economics major to figure out that the NCAA lost money on that deal.

Some of the convention's delegates claimed that the reason the commission's proposals were voted down was because the proposals needed to be researched before action could be taken.

Does this mean that the commission, headed by University of Maryland President John Slaughter (who should know better), held a special convention to present proposals without bothering to consider the pros and cons of these measures?

It is scary to believe that such a thing could be true, but considering the effects some of the commission's proposals would have on college athletics, it just may be.

With cuts in non-revenue sports scholarships, women's sports and non-revenue men's sports would wind up with even less emphasis in athletic programs than they have now. If there is no scholarship money available to an athlete, the time spent in practice and competition to represent the school is simply not worth his or her while.

It would also put more pressure on those athletes who are awarded scholarships to perform. There would be no room for a bench warmer or a developing athlete. Athletes who didn't perform well almost instantly would be cut to make room for others, who would be treated the same way. There would be no time for a coach to build a program and teach basic safety and skills to athletes.

Add to that the cuts in the number of coaches and the problem is compounded.

Are there any better ways to cut the cost of college athletics?

Maybe teams could arrange to compete close to home to cut travel expenses. Maybe they could combine facilities with the community so the school wouldn't bear the entire cost.

Maybe the member schools should just abolish the NCAA. Just an idea.

X-rated videos return to Raleigh store

CARRBORO — My friend Zack Diggerhole and I cruised over to spend a day poking fun at the large ice sculpture on display at the Art School that is a tribute to Dean Smith's nose.

After we were thrown out for trying to apply Sterno as a finish to the masterpiece, we decided to get a couple of videos and we weren't thinking about Top Gun. Zack and I were looking for one of those educational art films that you can only get in this fair town next to the quasi-intellectual-garbage heap.

I wanted to get that modern day classic, Teenage Sisters of Mercy and Bondage. So we went over to the North American Video, where we knew that such classics still are available. As we walked behind the partition that hid the tasty treats from innocent eyes, we found ourselves shocked.

The shelves that fill the entire room were bare.

Zack pinched himself and ran his fingers over the dusty shelf just to make sure that it wasn't an optical illusion. But it is true — no porn in Carrboro.

I decided that it was another case of moral terrorists.

"Perhaps they hid them behind the counter," Zack wondered.

But this wasn't so. We asked the guy at the counter what happened, and he said that he didn't know exactly what had happened. Another employee refused to discuss the matter.

Zack and I gave up our on-the-spot search for the lost videos and came back to Raleigh, despondent. We figured that we were stuck with having to watch a jammed signal version of the Playboy channel or else sneaking into The Keg.

But I still wanted the answer to where those videos had gone.

I called the North American Videos all over Raleigh to see if they knew what happened. All the employees that spoke to me over the phone pleaded ignorance or the Fifth. But an important fact was learned from this portion of the investigation: the North American Video store in Town Ridge Square Mall (that's in Raleigh) is renting X-rated videos.

The employee at the store was a little bit nervous about giving out this fact. But it is true. Has Raleigh started back during its artistic dark ages? Have those fanatic moral terrorists been dealt a swift blow?

Probably not. But since that frightening morning when all the back room shelves went bare, a small bit of hope lingered in me that a person with a liberal mind and a demonic craving for some fast bucks would rise up.

That day has arrived. But this is not the end. Someday the moral terrorists might strike and strip the shelves bare with a single sub-clause.

People laughed the first time the terrorists proposed making North Carolina porn-free. Let's not take this return to the stores lightly. There is always a light before the ceiling collapses.

Christian rap music is a spiritual art form

By Jeff Stiles
Staff Writer

Christian rap music? Some people feel that this is taking contemporary Christian music just a little too far. After all, secular groups such as Run-D.M.C. and the Beastie Boys use rap to glorify violence and illicit sex. Kids dance to the sounds of rap music, a "no-no" for good Christians, some feel. Can rap really be used in a religious format?

Michael Peace, one of the first Christian rap artists to be signed to a major label in Christian music (Reunion Records in Nashville), looks at his ministry as spreading more than just noise. His debut album, titled RRRap It Right, will soon be released. It consists of ten songs, including an instrumental.

"Rap is more than just a music art form," Peace says. "It's a language — a palatable, powerful way to share the gospel."

It makes sense. After all, most Christian rock artists say that their music has the ability to reach listeners who might never hear the gospel in the traditional church context. Performing rap music with a similar "outreach" goal in mind is a logical extension of that concept.

Michael Peace, 28, grew up with foster parents in New York City. He describes the neighborhood he grew up in: Turn-up streets with garbage everywhere, kids fighting daily after school, a place where roaches and rats made themselves at home. Peace claims he never heard the name of Jesus mentioned — "not even as a curse word" — until after he turned sixteen years old.

Peace studied mass media and communications at Brockport State University in New York where he was a militant leader among the other black students. He tells stories of covert terrorism, secret midnight meetings, tapped phone lines and rumors of being watched by the FBI during this troubled period of his life.

During his senior year of college, however, Peace became a Christian. It was then that he saw an opportunity to tell others of his new-found faith that existed in spite of all the bitterness that characterized his early life.

Through his music, he hopes to provide alternative listening to people who like to listen to rap but prefer spiritual lyrics.

"I want to give Christian youth an opportunity to take Christian rap music to their friends that listen to rap," Peace explains, "friends that may not be open to hearing the gospel any other way."

"I'm a preacher by trade and a Christian by grace," Peace sings, "telling all the world about the one heavenly place!"

A paper that is entirely the product of the student body becomes at once the official organ through which the thoughts, the activity and in fact the very life of the campus are registered.

School gets bad rap

In a 10 page report written by former Dean of Textiles Dame S. Hamby and 10 other members of that school, the university has been accused of ignoring faculty concerns in the design of the new School of Centennial Campus. In fact, the School of Textiles faculty and administration voted unanimously against moving to Centennial Campus.

It's hard to walk through Cameron Park without tripping over signs that oppose the building of Century Boulevard. Residents in that neighborhood are afraid of what the increased traffic will do to their peaceful residential streets.

Students in the School of Design can be heard asking if anybody has seen Dean Claude E. McKinney, chief overseer of the Centennial project. Some design students are wondering if they have a dean anymore. Obviously, the building of Centennial Campus is stirring up its share of controversy.

Centennial Campus is garnering a great deal of attention and press these days, but much of the attention is negative. Many of the reasons for the bad press are obvious: there are differing opinions as to exactly what Centennial Campus will eventually become, change always causes conflict, and money is involved. None of the negative coverage by the press is good for Centennial Campus and it's a shame that this potential resource is getting off to such a bad start.

The university has created some of its own problems in this game of public relations. Only aier pressure from residents in Cameron Park has the university decided to work with those residents on the eventual fate of their neighborhood. And that is as it should be.

The university is a community resource and must be sensitive to the community that it serves because that is also the community which funds the university. There are signs of the university's willingness to work more openly with its own faculty and with the city in the design of Centennial Campus. We hope that the trend continues.

Journalism is the ability to meet the challenge of filling space.

Small gripes get aired

I've figured out why Andy Rooney gets on 60 Minutes every week and begins complaining about his inane peeves. He's had to come up with an opinion every week for so many years that he has finally gotten down to those small concerns that universally drive us all insane. He's usually right on target, but he comes off a bit sad and pathetic with his whining. I mention this particular commentator because I am faced with a deadline and can think of only those smaller aspects of university life that continually upset me. Consider this my Andy Rooney column; I'm sure I'll expand on some of these issues in a more serious vein in the future.

Air conditioning. Why is it never kept at a reasonable temperature? Has anybody else had the sweat freeze to their shirt during a lecture? Do these machines have control knobs? Where are they?

Parking. Got any? Back

Jim Shell

when my car still worked I collected so many parking tickets that I know my funding could have paved a couple of streets in this city.

Don't have a car anyway? Ever try biking across campus? Did you have trouble biking up the stairs that led to the tunnels?

Can anybody else find the correct forms to fill out when it comes time to preregister? Can anybody else get hold of a catalog to find out which classes are available? And why is it that the course descriptions never seem to jive with the courses that I take? Haven't you ever thought you were attending the wrong class? Couldn't tell from the course description, could you? After you fill out the preregistration forms, can you find somebody to sign it? Have you ever, in frustration, faked a signature? Me neither.

Why is this university the only one in the area to get the second string entertainment, or the speakers who seem to have just gotten off the barbecue circuit? I mean, there is an occasional bright light shining in this area, but I was absent that day.

I can't leave without mentioning the Students Supply Store. I was standing in line the other day and noticed that there was a stack of customer complaint forms beside me on a shelf. I had the time; the line was plenty long. It's just that the form didn't have enough white space on it after I wrote my comments on the resale value of the books that I buy.

Well, here's to Andy, and I'll be back in earnest next week.

Reason overdoes on Ignorance but is liked in good condition...
