Notice suicidal signs; death obsession

From Staff Reports

After a Raleigh woman committed suicide on N.C. State's campus, Dr. Grace Finkle of NCSU's Counseling Center said that warning signals of suicide can be detected.

She said that suicide is the second leading cause of death among college-age students and that students need to be aware of the warning signals for their own benefit as well as for the benefit of their friends.

"One of the main things to be aware of is if someone threatens to [commit suicide], take it seriously," she said. She said that when someone has a plan or has talked about suicide, it is time for that person to seek help.

Other warning signs include depression, weight loss, crying spells, self-criticism and a preoccupation with death. Women, she said, are more prone to suicide attempts after the end of a relationship. She also said that the first weeks of the semester are when most suicides on college campuses occur.

For students, counselors are on call 24-hours-a-day. Counselors can be contacted through Public Safety or through Clark Infirmary, Finkle said.

Community mental health centers are also available 24-hours-a-

Girl leaps off top of D.H. Hill

From Staff Reports

A 21-year-old Raleigh woman jumped to her death from the ninth floor of D.H. Hill Library late Saturday night or early Sunday morning.

Laura Kauski, 21, was found by Public Safety officers outside the library near the main entrance between 6:30 and 7 a.m. Sunday.

Sgt. Teresa Crocker of Public Safety said Monday that Kauski was not a student at N.C. State and had never been enrolled here. She added that an autopsy was performed Sunday to determine if Kauski was under the influence of drugs or alcohol before the incident.

day. Area hospital emergency rooms, such as at Rex and Wake Medical, also provide assistance when a person is suicidal, she said.

General Assembly will equal outside funds for new arena

By Sam Hays Staff Writer

Construction of a sports arena for N.C. State basketball games should be handled through regular channels, not through the office of Budget and Management, UNC System President C.D. Spangler said Friday.

In an interview after Friday's Board of Governors meeting, Spangler said that if the arena was needed, he was not opposed to its construction. However, he said that the matter could be handled better by using normal Board of Trustees and BOG approvals.

The legislature has appropriated $1.5 million for planning and development of the arena. The money was requested by a Wolfpack legislature member directly to the Appropriations committee. Money for the UNC System is normally channeled through the UNC Board of Governors to the governor, and then to the legislature.

The appropriation was for "planning and development of a sports arena on the Centennial Campus or at another location to be determined by the Board of Trustees" of NCSU according to the bill.

Also, the $1.5 million must be matched on a dollar for dollar basis by non-State funds, such as from alumni. Also one-half of the seats must be allocated to students for all regular NCSU athletic contests.

If more than $1.5 million is received in "non-State funds," the intent of the General Assembly is to match them, according to the bill.

"College of" change in computer science

By Don Munk Staff Writer

N.C. State Chancellor Bruce Poulton has approved a request by the faculty of the computer science department to transfer from the College of Physical and Mathematical Science to the College of Engineering.

The transfer will not affect the CSC curriculum, said department head Robert Funderlic. "The requirements will not change for any of the people in the program or incoming freshmen."

The diploma will change slightly. After this summer, computer science department graduates' diploma will be signed by the dean of the College of Engineering. This summer's graduates will get a degree signed by acting PAMS dean Leslie Sims.

Curriculum changes may occur in the future due to accreditation standards or national trends, but they will not change because of the move to engineering, said Thomas Honeycutt, associate department head.

According to a July 18 memo from the chancellor's office, Poulton approved the organizational transfer after considering the departmental vote on the subject and consulting with the dean of engineering, the provost, the vice chancellor of research and the deans council.

During the departmental vote last spring, the CSC faculty ranked their preference for reorganization among several alternatives. As their first choice, 17 voted to move to the College of Engineering as an autonomous unit, while eight voted to transfer to the College of Engineering and merge with computer engineering (a division of the electrical and computer engineering department). Four voted to remain in PAMS.

New BOG chairman selected

By Sam Hays Staff Writer

Robert L. "Roddy" Jones, 52, was selected chairman of UNC Board of Governors at its meeting in Chapel Hill last Friday.

Jones has been chairman of East Carolina University Board of Trustees, on the Board of Trustees at Peace College, Shaw University and on the school board of Ravenscroft School.

Jones graduated from ECU in 1958. He is currently president of Davidson and Jones corporation.

He said he was the first BOG chairman who is not a lawyer or a graduate of UNC-Chapel Hill.

Jones said his concerns are with the whole UNC System and that he looks forward to representing all the schools in the system. His experience with educational institutions includes being on the Board of Visitors, Babcock school of Wake Forest University, director of the Wake County Education Foundation, and a member of the State Advisory Council on Vocational of Murfreesboro.

Education.

Jones succeeds Philip Carson who has been president since 1984.

Samuel Poole was elected vice chairman by a one vote margin on the second ballot. Joan Fox of Oxford and Charles Flack of Forest City were also candidates. David Whichard II of Greenville is the retiring vice chairman.

Asa Spaulding, a Durham businessman, was elected secretary of the Board to succeed Geneva Bouz

Vice chancellor named

Special to Technician

Albert Lanier, director of university relations at N.C. State, has been named vice chancellor of university relations.

Chancellor Bruce Poulton made the announcement July 29, following approval of the University of North Carolina Board of Governors.

Poulton said, "The position of vice chancellor more appropriately reflects the scope and significance of our university relations efforts—one of the university's major thrusts as we strive to communicate with the people of this state."

Lanier serves as principal advisor to Poulton in the area of university relations and coordinates a comprehensive communications program for the university. His responsibilities include maintaining channels of communication with university constituencies, members of federal, state and local governments, representatives of the news media and members of the educational communities.

He has served as director of university relations since 1985 when he was promoted from the position of associate director of university relations.

As a participant in the U.S. Army ROTC at NCSU, he was commissioned a second lieutenant following graduation.

During his 22-year career in the Army, which ended in 1975 with his retirement as a colonel, he graduated from the Command and General Staff College and earned his masters of science degree in agricultural economics from Cornell University in 1962.

Lanier came to NCSU in 1972 as a continuing education specialist and joined the Alumni Relations office in 1977. While working there in 1980, he earned his Doctor of Education degree with emphasis on educational administration.

Comedian Leroy Seabrooks entertained NCSU students in the Student Center lobby Monday, July 24. He was sponsored by the Union Activities Board.

Microbes may save polluted water

By Don Munk
Staff Writer

Farmers use the chemical, Lasso, to kill weeds in their fields, but N.C. State researchers have found it can seep into ground water and pollute drinking water supplies.

Only low concentrations of the chemical have been detected in drinking water supplies so far, but if farmers continue using it, concentrations could increase, said Sun Hone Ling, a master's degree candidate in toxicology.

Sun, along with professors T.J. Sheets and F.T. Corbin, believe microorganisms can prevent contamination of ground water.

Guided by the professors, Sun began a search for microorganisms that consume the herbicide in August 1987. She collected soil samples from an N.C. State soy bean field. The soil samples contained microorganisms, and Sun discovered that some of the microorganisms can survive by consuming Lasso.

Sun isolated the microorganisms in the lab, then combined the soil samples with a solution of basal salt and Lasso herbicide. Eventually, nutrients from the soil were gone, but the microbes survived anyway, living on the herbicide and basal salt.

Sun continued feeding the microbes and increased the dosage of herbicide, producing a group of the microbes with a hearty appetite for the herbicide.

Sun's next problem is to identify the microbes. Sun will look at the microbes with a microscope to identify their morphologies (shapes) and conduct biochemical tests to determine some physical properties of the microorganisms.

More work must be done before people can control ground water pollution by microorganisms.

The microorganisms must be tested in a variety of environments.

If they can survive in only a few controlled environments, then more microorganisms should be isolated from nature or created in the lab using genetic engineering techniques, Sun said.

Department relocates

No faculty member chose the other alternative—merge with the department of electrical and computer engineering, forming a new department, and two faculty members did not vote.

Poulton approved the request that computer engineering will remain a part of the electrical and computer engineering department.

Several reasons prompted CSC to propose the move, Honeycutt said. First, the CSC faculty already work more frequently with faculty in the College of Engineering than with PAMS.

Also, the College of Engineering is a larger college with more resources. "They have more people involved with student services than the College of PAMS," Honeycutt said. A bonus for students is that NCSU's engineering school is well-known; companies recruiting engineers will now see CSC among the engineering departments, Honeycutt said.

Funderlic added that the change may also boost the graduate CSC program.

Corchiani eagerly awaits upcoming season

By Scott Deuel
Sports Editor

Despite the success the Wolfpack men's basketball team achieved last winter, rising sophomore Chris Corchiani is looking to accomplish more next season. He believes the Pack can claim its 11th Atlantic Coast Conference Championship if things fall into place.

Corchiani was sensational at point guard for the Wolfpack last season, directing State to a 24-8 record and a bid to the 1988 NCAA tournament.

"Last season was a real good year as far as our record was concerned," Corchiani said. "But post season made the whole year disappointing, because the team's goal was to win the ACC Tournament."

The Pack's regular season ended with a No. 11 national ranking, but the season came to an abrupt end after a stunning upset at the hands of giant-killer Murray State.

One highlight of the season for Corchiani came when State defeated Duke at Cameron Indoor Stadium. Corchiani helped lead the Wolfpack to the upset over the Blue Devils, scoring 15 points and handing out four assists. As his freshman season unfolded, Corchiani discovered that ACC basketball is everything it's built up to be.

"It was really exciting during the year and a learning experience as a freshman," Corchiani said. "The ACC is everything I expected it to be, incredible excitement. Playing in front of a home crowd sets an advantage. There's no better place to play than Reynolds, and the fans are a big boost to our team."

One of Corchiani's buddies, Chuck Brown, has a lot of praise for his friend.

"Chris is a great player and a great person," Brown said. "He's the key to the team because he has to get the ball to the right person."

Corchiani starred at Miami Lakes High School in Hialeah, Fla., and was the career scoring and assist leader in Florida high school history. He averaged 24.3 points, 10.1 assists, 4.5 steals, and 4.4 rebounds per game as a senior and was named Florida's Mr. Basketball twice. Corchiani played four years on the varsity squad.

"College is great because there is always a new challenge, people who are better than you," Corchiani said. "My goal at State is to come in and help the team in whatever way possible." Even though people might think Corchiani only thinks basketball, he actually has many outside interests that in no way relate to the sport.

"I love all water sports, like water skiing and salt water fishing. I also enjoy volleyball on the beach," Corchiani said. "At school, I like going to fraternity parties and going out with friends.

Corchiani also has a taste for jazz music.

Hailing from Florida, Corchiani has had to adjust to life away from home.

"I go down to Florida any chance I get," Corchiani said. "It's been a hard adjustment because I don't have many opportunities to visit my home. Miami is really neat because there's plenty to do and you never get bored. Never a dull moment there."

Corchiani likes North Carolina, but he's not sure where he would like to live after he graduates from N.C. State. Florida is the likely answer.

"The people are much friendlier in North Carolina than they are in Florida," Corchiani said.

Corchiani's brother, Gabe, played point guard at the University of New Orleans for four years, wearing uniform No. 13 like Chris. Their father and high school coach, Gabe, Sr., played for the University of Miami and also wore the same numbered jersey.

"Thirteen has always been a lucky number in my family," Corchiani said.

Corchiani's biggest fan is his sister Kathy, who is out of school.

Corchiani's goals for next season include winning an ACC Championship and once again getting into post-season play. Individual goals are to contribute more to the team and showing more hustle on the court.

"I just want to do whatever it can to help the team," Corchiani said. "We will definitely have players who can play next season. I always hustle as much as I can because I'm small. When you're smaller, you have to give more than other players."

Charlotte Hornets already walking losers' path

Beginning this October, the state of North Carolina will have its own National Basketball Association team to follow, and if the early legacy of the Charlotte Hornets is any indication of what's to come, the Hornets could well prove to be the most useless franchise the NBA ever got itself stuck with.

Let's go back to the beginning. No sooner had Charlotte been awarded an NBA expansion franchise for the '88-89 season than some dork in the franchise's new front office decided that the best way to name the new team would be with a fan poll. History has shown repeatedly that the less fan involvement in these kinds of decisions the better. The last two presidential elections should have told them that, but obviously, someone in Charlotte was comatose at the wheel.

In hindsight, Charlotte could have done much worse with their name poll. The team could have wound up being the Charlotte Pedarots or the Charlotte Center for Communicable Diseases. The Charlotte Traffic Jams would have been the most appropriate. Instead, the entire Pollyanna population of the Queen City got together and came up with ... are you ready for this ... the Charlotte Spirit.

Note that Spirit is singular here. Not the Charlotte Spirits, which would have been equally stupid but would have at least allowed each team member to be an individual Spirit. The Charlotte Spirit would be called a, well, what the hell would a member of the Char-

Bruce Winkworth

SPORTS COLUMNIST

lote Spirit be called?

Embarrassed? Better about a loser. Down in Miami, the NBA's other expansion team, without the benefit of a fan poll, somehow came up with the Miami Heat, which is just about as ridiculous as the Charlotte Spirit, but at least everyone knows that heat is a natural resource of the city of Miami, along with cocaine, laundered money, foreign languages, Cubans, crime, and voodoo.

When you play word association and someone says "Charlotte," what's the first thing that pops into your mind? Yeah, right. No one other than the 12 heads who voted in the "Name the Team" poll, ever associated the city of Charlotte with spirit.

Luckily for the Charlotte franchise, someone had enough sense, barely, to realize that the Charlotte Spirit would never cut it, so on their own, they changed the name to the Hornets, which has been the traditional name of Charlotte sports teams for decades. This person was summarily fired on the spot.

You would think that one near disaster like the name Charlotte Spirit would have been enough for Charlotte, a city so insecure that it has spent most of the last ten years or so bawling about what a major league type of city it is, which may or may not be true, although if it were true, you'd think someone, anyone, outside of Charlotte would have noticed this by now without Charlotte's help.

But one near disaster was hardly sufficient for the Hornets. No, they had a legacy to establish, and the old New York Mets and the old Los Angeles Clippers had better move aside. Here come the Hornets. Not satisfied with just being a bad basketball team — their selections in the expansion and college drafts were laughable — Charlotte decided that their team also would be the worst dressed team in the history of professional sports.

Without a doubt, when Kelly Tripuka modeled the Hornets' new uniforms, members of the old Seattle Pilots must have chuckled. If you never saw the uniforms the old Pilots wore in their lone season in the American League, suffice it to say that they looked like a bunch of clowns, which was exactly the same way they played.

The Hornets, on the other hand, will look like a bunch of sissies in their new uniforms. The Hornets uniforms look, at first glance, like some kind of faded U.S. Army issue lingerie. The uniform shorts are pleated. Yes, pleated. Put a little lace on these uniforms and they'd look like teddies. The overall effect is too much for mere words to describe, so take my word for it. They look absurd.

Go back and take a good look at the photos of Tripuka modeling these uniforms. Looks like he's having himself a good laugh, doesn't it? But the laugh will be on him once the season starts. The Hornets may be the only team in sports history that will dress worse than it plays, and you can only begin to imagine the thoughts that will go through the minds of their NBA opponents when they see this team take the floor dressed like a bunch of Playboy bunnies.

The only thing missing from these uniforms, besides the lace, might be a parasol, which would have made the photos of Tripuka look like some kind of kinky, girly magazine pictorial of "Gone With the Wind" with Rhett Butler dressed in drag.

Let the season begin, but make sure the children have gone to bed before you watch the Hornets play.

Celebrate the Savings!

Vomit's latest album is better than their name

VOMIT LAUNCH EXILED SANDWICH

If nothing else, this band should get some kind of award for one of the most graphic band names.

A name that brings to mind one of those "too much beer and too many cigarettes on a Saturday night" kind of things. However, getting by the name and into the music reveals a fairly pleasant surprise, with the exception of a couple of songs, none of the music would inspire any action similar to the band's name.

Most of the stuff has a punkish pop feel to it. A better description might be to consider the sound a cross of 10,000 Maniacs and the Dead Kennedys would emit.

Joey
Lockwood

ALBUM REVIEWS

The band's name and the crappy artwork on the cover puts the listener in a frame of mind to expect some idiot who learned how to play the guitar only a few days before the album was recorded. Surprise, the guitar's assault on most songs is very reminiscent of the blazing guitar from the Dead Kennedys toned down a bit. The lead guitarist, Lindsey Thrasher, is not only capable, but downright good. She provides the record with a swirling ethereal sound that goes well with the lead singer's crooning.

Patricia De Rowland, the lead singer, is another surprise. Rather than constantly yelling and screaming as would be expected, she actually sings. Her voice is similar to that of Natalie Merchant from 10,000 Maniacs. De Rowland's voice melodically croons the strange lyrics.

There's nothing remarkable about the bass and drums except like the other instruments, they are played by people that are more than just capable. The songs deal with odd topics of modern society. Titles such as "Bat Acid," "Clowns Are Whores," and "Weird Song" are merely clues for the true lyrical content of the song. The lyrics lean heavily toward imagery, instead of directly stating their point. "Scraping Wil-lows" and "Weightdown" are songs that emphasize this with lines like "There's some cloudy doubts and there's some rainy clouds, and they're always hanging around."

There is one song that does reflect the band name and album cover: "Swirley Song." Nothing like flushing your head in a toilet. Vomit Launch has been around since late 1985 and with "Exiled Sandwich" they'll linger on longer.

Elvis stamp issue gets its licks

MEMPHIS—Should Elvis have a postage stamp?

There are five groups concerned about this leading issue in America.

Group A says that Elvis was a drug abuser and an overweight slob and he shouldn't be glorified on envelopes. This is the era of Just Say No.

Group B agrees with Group A on Elvis' problems. But they think that a stamp with a picture of the fat Elvis could be used to sway children from a life of overindulgences.

Group C thinks that the stamp should have an image of the young Elvis that we all love and cherish.

Group D believes that Elvis is still alive and under the rules of the U.S. Postal Service, those rules stating that living people can't be on postage stamps.

Group E doesn't really care what the Postal Service does. A stamp is only something they lick and stick. Give Elvis a stamp.

Did anyone protest when William Faulkner and John F. Kennedy got their own stamps? Faulkner was an alcoholic and Kennedy had strange women over at the White House for sex.

Nobody forced the Postal Service ice to use a picture of Faulkner hitting the bottle or Kennedy dogging Marilyn Monroe.

As far as Elvis being alive and living folks being banned from stamps, Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus clown Lou Jacobs was featured on a stamp commemorating the circus. Lou is still alive. Stamp came out.

In fact, nobody should dictate to the Postal Service which Elvis image is going to be used.

The Postal Service should print the stamps on black velvet. Elvis would have wanted it that way.

Grave pondering

Is Elvis alive?

This is the question of the summer as people scour the country looking for The King

Every week brings new accounts of Elvis sightings on the cover of The Weekly World News.

Air Force's Operation Blue Book announced in a secret memo that most sightings of Elvis are either Roy Orbison or weather balloons that were made for the 10th anniversary.

The King is becoming the only pure American religion.

What good is it if we invade some tiny country and tell the natives that our nation is made great through the grace of some Jewish guy from the Middle East who wasn't around when this country was founded?

The Romans and Greeks didn't have gods that lived out of the country. The Japanese worship their Emperor as a god. All great civilizations have gods that are truly connected to their nation.

Elvis must be that deity for the United States.

Already the seeds of the Church of Elvis have begun to bloom. People swear that he has appeared to them and cured AIDS and cancer with his touch.

Elvis encompasses America through his music, movies and style. Even the way Elvis died is part of American culture. He went white on the toilet. Nobody gets crucified in Peoria.

The Church of Elvis will have the Elvis Bible with the Gospels of Col. Tom, Dr. Nick, and Priscilla.

One night I had a dream about 5,000 Elvis impersonators on stage singing "Suspicious Minds." They came from all races, sexes and creeds, heights, costumes and accents. Yet with even these differences, they were all Elvis.

Richard Marx talks about that live rush

By Dan Pawlowski
Staff Writer

Richard Marx has soared to the top of the music charts with the help of two former Eagles members.

The 24-year-old Marx hooked up with Don Henley and Glenn Frey on a couple tunes on his debut record and he is now the toast of the recording industry.

His self-titled million selling album that has spawned hits singles such as "Don't Mean Nothing," "Hold Onto the Nights" and "Endless Summer Nights," and his videos dominate MTV.

For the past year, Marx has controlled being a dominate new face in music and Technician caught up with him during his recent show at the Raleigh Civic Center.

Technician: To what extent has your growing up in Chicago influenced your career?

Marx: None that I can think of. Even though I grew up in Chicago, I was a kid who was very influenced by music of all different styles — nothing that was related to Chicago. I wasn't a blues kid or anything like that. I was influenced by theradio. I miss Chicago. I have every intention of moving back there. But I have to be where the business is. And the music business just (is not) in Chicago, it's in L.A.

Technician: How personal are the lyrics in the song "Don't Mean Nothing"?

Marx: They're just as much autobiographical as they are biographical about other people. I think anybody in any occupation has been through that situation. I still get doors slammed in my face. I still get jerked around. We all get promised things the way that we think are going to be the way things are. We get lied to and everything. So it's a pretty universal statement.

Technician: How do you feel about your sex-image role? And how would you like your female fans to view you?

Marx: The first thing you've got to understand is that up until a year ago, nobody looked twice at me. Where were they when I was in high school, and I couldn't get a date? So, I really don't pay much attention to that. I think that what they are responding to is what they are being given, which is a personality on video, and stage, that is very much me. I'm not playing a character, because I'm not an actor. In fact, it's really lucky for me. Because, my image...I've been trying to figure out what mine is. I figured out that it's me. It's just kind of me doing what I do. Which makes it a little more comfortable. I don't have to worry about what I wear. Because I've always dressed like this. I've always gone about presenting myself in such a way that's the same as people see.

I never got into this business to be thought of or looked at that way. That was never my motivation...it isn't even ego. I wanted to be successful in the music business. But, I never set out to be a star. And, I never set out to sell 50 million records. I just really always wanted to have a career in the music business, for as long as I wanted. That is still my goal. Because my next album could stiff in a big way. It's happened to enough people—the sophomore jinx. I don't worry about it, because I'm a very prolific writer. That's usually what causes people problems. That they can't come up with material. I've already written three albums worth of material for the next album.

But, in terms of the girls, and stuff, they're a great audience, and I really get off on the fact, that...sometimes I really think that I can just go out, and just move around, and I would get applause. I wouldn't have to sing. Which is a nice feeling. But, if you base what you do on it, you're over. It's fun. I appreciate it. But, they'll feel the same way about the next guy who comes along with long hair, and tight jeans.

Technician: Can you compare the different sensations you get from seeing yourself on MTV, or hearing yourself on the radio, to performing live?

Marx: That feeling is different. Because, when you watch yourself on MTV or you hear yourself on the radio, the only person really getting off on it, maybe, is you.

Once in a while I get a buzz out of hearing myself on the radio. I don't mean to say this in a nonchalant way. But, I have gotten used to it luckily. So, it's not a big shock when I turn on the radio, and hear myself.

In fact, sometimes when I hear a single that's out, and I don't hear it on the radio, I get pissed off...The first time I ever heard myself on the radio it was a tremendous rush. To know that it's something that I came up in my living room. And, there it is, being broadcast. But, this feeling is totally different.

This is me doing something, and getting an immediate feedback. Whereas, if I go into the recording studio, it takes six months for me to find out if they like it. If I make a video, it takes two days of boring standing around and filming. And I don't know how it's going to be received.

If I do a song out there — we do a couple of new songs in the show—and they're getting just as much a response as the hits. That makes me know what's working and what's not working.

City gives notice

After much debate, the university and the Raleigh city council have finally decided on a road system for Centennial Campus. With this out of the way, university officials are hoping for final approval of their rezoning requests.

Not so fast, says the Raleigh city council.

Last week, the city council very clearly spelled out a few concerns they had about the university's plans. The concerns they raised demonstrate that the city is very concerned about the environmental impact of the new campus.

First of all, the city asked the university to expand the greenway planned around Lake Raleigh. Raleigh has a large number of paths, called greenways, located throughout the city that have been saved from the developer's planning book. The city is very proud of these areas and is always conscious of opportunities to expand the greenways.

The banks of Lake Raleigh, located in the midst of Centennial Campus, will make a much better walkway than a parking lot. With proper planning, it seems the city and university could have their cake and eat it too. The university could have their buildings, located a safe distance away from the lake, and the development would rescue the site from four-wheel-drive enthusiasts, allowing more people to enjoy to scenery. We strongly support a large greenway around Lake Raleigh.

Along this line, the city wants to be sure that the ecological features of the area are taken into consideration when specific plans are made. The university should certainly heed this request.

NCSU's main campus certainly will never win any awards for beauty. Perhaps Centennial Campus planners could work extra hard to see that physical appearance of the new campus will, in some way, offset the area north of Western Blvd.

The council also wants more details on what plans the university has for a mass transit system.

On this request, the university must be prepared to do some double talking. As far as we know, the university has no formal plans for any type of mass transit. In fact, efforts to study mass transit have been delayed and hampered by university officials.

For example, last year the Physical Environment Committee appointed a Mass-Transit Subcommittee that studied the mass transit issue. Members of the sub-committee included Transportation Director Janis Rhodes and faculty senate leader Ray Long. With that all-star cast, one might have expected some good proposals. Unfortunately, disagreement over the report caused it to be delayed until next year. So the largest university in the state trudges on with absolutely no plans for a mass transit system.

It seems a bit embarrassing that the city feels it is necessary to twist the university's arm to ensure that Centennial Campus is planned wisely. Perhaps the public scrutiny will catch the attention of the university community.

Centennial Campus might be a little slow getting off the ground, but the extra time spent today will make a better campus for tomorrow.

Quote of the Day

Thus mathematics may be defined as the subject in which we never know what we are talking about, nor whether what we are saying is true.

Murderers deserve death

The issue of crime and punishment has burned fiercely on the tongues of many these past few years and the flames have flared even higher recently with the nomination of Michael Dukakis as the Democratic Presidential nominee. His controversial opinions on the American prison system were laid bare for public scrutiny last year by his continued support of the Massachusetts prisoner furlough system.

This system, enacted in 1972 by Governor Francis W. Sargent, allowed inmates to begin taking weekend passes for good behavior after a certain number of years in prison. Convicted murderers soon walked the streets freely and many never bothered to return. In spite of public protest, Dukakis refused to have the program banned, claiming that such an act would "cut the heart out of efforts at inmate rehabilitation." Finally, a group of concerned victims formed Citizens Against Unsafe Society (CAUS). This group collected over 50,525 signatures required to have the bill placed on the November 1987 referendum and eventually the furlough program was terminated.

In America today, violent crime is on the rise while safety on the streets and in the homes has sharply declined. Legislators, in a noble attempt to make the nation more "humanitarian" by setting up furlough and parole systems, have lost touch with reality and refuse to wake up. They truly believe that hardened criminals can be reformed from their heinous ways, even though empirical evidence says otherwise. Repeat offenders continue to terrorize us, even in broad daylight, and they show few signs of changing. Brutal murderers maim and kill again and again, and yet they are paroled "for good behavior." Life sentences have lost their impact because eventually a cold-blooded killer will have his sentence commuted to a lifetime on parole. In theory, an ax murderer, after a decade behind bars, could regain the freedom he should have lost forever.

The purpose of the American penal system is twofold: to make the nation safer by keeping dangerous criminals away from society, and to assure that any criminal who is eventually set free will never, ever, under any circumstances, want to commit a crime again.

A convicted murderer has already proven himself to be a danger to society at large and society has no reason to believe that this animal will ever again be able to raise himself to the necessary level of human dignity. Therefore, society has every right to cage him behind bars for his life that it might be guaranteed "a more perfect union." And yet, well-meaning "intellectuals" tell us they want to experiment, performing socio-engineering to discover if in fact these proven killers can be funneled back into the mainstream of American life. After decades of this experimentation, along with thousands of needless and bloody deaths, it should be obvious that these efforts have led the nation down the wrong path. And yet, the liberals persist.

Capital punishment is vital social defense

In 1972, the Supreme Court "liberated" America from the capital punishment system, a system which guaranteed that at least some murderers would never become repeat offenders. That decision was later wisely overturned. However, the capital punishment system as it operates today is grossly inefficient, both in dispensing justice and in assuring that murderers do not repeat their crimes.

Defense lawyers, out to make a name for themselves in spite of the consequences, continuously badger and harass crime victims in court, delay proceedings with irrelevant technicalities, and on the whole, obstruct true justice, regardless of whether their clients actually committed the heinous crimes of which they are accused. If the prosecution does succeed in convicting the alleged killer, the defense again does everything within its power to overturn the ruling, right or wrong. As a result, very few killers land on death row. Most get out on parole in less than ten years and wind up spreading more fear and death into Uncle Sam's blood stream.

Worse yet, billions of American tax dollars are blown on building new prisons to house more murderers, who are then fed and clothed with American tax dollars for the duration, so that when they leave they will be healthy and clothed murderers, ready for another attack.

This trend cannot continue. Convicted murderers must never ever be placed into a situation where they can repeat their crimes, even on other criminals. The only logical solution to this dilemma is to lower the obstacles that block the swift justice of capital punishment for all murder convictions. Through the execution of all vicious criminals, Americans will be assured that these animals will never again commit their grotesque acts of violence. Defense lawyers must be hauled in the technicalities they are allowed to use, and loopholes in the criminal legalities must be closed tightly. All individuals who contemplate murder must be forced to think twice about how much they value their own lives. All murderers must be held fully accountable for their actions, without excuse. "Hereditary environment" are no excuse for cold-blooded killing. And "temporary insanity" shows only that the person making this plea has a seething volcano of violence bubbling in his brain that may erupt again and cost another innocent life.

Across-the-board capital punishment is the only method available today that will guarantee a severe drop in the number of violent crimes committed in America. As long as a proven killer lives behind bars, there will be a well-intentioned but seriously misguided "socio-engineer" who will experiment with "mainstreaming" this killer at the expense of public safety and innocent lives.
