Art more than pretty picture for Design students

By Daphne Edwards
Staff Writer

Art is often more than just a pretty picture. For design students in Sculpture Studio 400, it is an opportunity to creatively battle injustice.

of the assignment was to allow the students to "simulate through their projects" and understand the various connections man has to society.

Board appoints commission for investigation

From Staff Reports

The UNC Board of Governors appointed a commission Friday to conduct an independent investigation into numerous allegations of wrong-doing and corruption in N.C. State's athletics program.

Chancellor Bruce Poulton

"This can best be accomplished by an impartial and complete investigation, and the full disclosure of all the pertinent facts by a group of outstanding North Carolinians who have no interest or commitment except to find the truth," he said.

Klopman, former Chairman of the Board and CEO of Burlington Industries, and Samuel Poole, the BOG's vice chair. Poole will head the commission. Poole could not be reached for comment Sunday.

Deans probe grade change allegations

NCSU cleared of charges

By Paul Woolvortan

N.C. State's 10 academic deans said there is no evidence Chris Washburn's grades were illicitly changed while he attended the university. In a prepared statement released Friday, the deans said: "We have examined the records of the student in question and find that the official record does not support the allegations concerning grade changes.

NCSU should emphasize teaching

By Don Munk
Senior Staff Writer

Some N.C. State faculty members think the university rewards its staff for scientific research more than for excellence in teaching. And they say priorities ought to shift back to where they belong.

"Everybody agrees that there has been an increased emphasis on research," Suval said. "We (the university) increased enormously our activity as far as grants are concerned," she said.

devote less energy to teaching, Suval said. "Fifteen years down the road, there will be no more dedicated professors in tenured positions," she said.

All talk, little action on tunnel for disabled

It's not easy being wheelchair-bound on State's campus. What you and I regard as a routine trip to the gym or Student Center is an epic voyage for someone in a wheelchair.

Because I said so

tance that is literally a stone's throw, becomes a 20-minute voyage because you can't use the stairs. It's even more frustrating when you discover that a solution to this campus' pedestrian barrier has been gathering dust on administrators' shelves for almost a decade.

to terrorist tactics. Metz did provoke and aggravate the crowd, prompting one woman to call him a 'jerk' and untie the cat. She told him that she would love it more than he would. He also managed to bring the campus police and the newspaper to the scene, as he had hoped to do. Arousing attention and hostility is the intent of the terrorist, he said.

One visual construction that didn't Wheeler bound white, yellow, black and red balloons together and hung a scroll from the balloons, saying: "The impossible is possible."

The different colors signified the different races of the world and the slogan on the scroll was a call for society to strive for harmony, he said.

Heath Satow created an equally powerful image of a barbed wire teddy bear to relay the concept of the abused child. Satow scattered little bits of ing in the barbed wire and placed a small music box inside the bear.

The music conveyed the image of a crying child with its sad, high-pitched melody.

The group said they were impelled to touch the teddy bear due to the pain conveyed by the music, but simultaneously held back because of the barbed wire.

Other students' projects dealt with the homeless, religious controversies and animal rights.

"Because you had to participate, you experienced the problem yourself and you could identify with it," Milne said.

The design students hoped to not only educate themselves, but also to educate others, Raymond said.

"Some of them want to increase other people's awareness and others want to make a statement," Herring added.

Raymond said he hoped that the students learned "not only to dedicate themselves to art and design, but to understand how their decisions affected society."

E.F. Harris called the underpass, "...a safe, barrier-free connection between North and South campus. All ramps, no steps and safety lit."

The article also stated that the $1.6 million project had been designated as a "high-priority capital improvement project" by the UNC board of governors. Translated into English, this means it was on the university's number-one wish list.

Obviously, the Legislature wasn't in a generous mood that summer and the project drifted into unfunded limbo. Today, eight years later, the construction plans for the underpass are still lying around at Campus Planning.

The only thing that's changed is the price. At an October meeting of the university's Physical Environment Committee, Harris estimated the project would cost about $2 million to build.

That sounds like a heap of money. Until you realize that between July 1987 and June 1988, $171 million worth of projects were either completed, under construction or being planned.

If the administrators threw their weight behind this project like they did for the proposed basketball arena, the underpass' construction could start as soon as next fall.

Unfortunately, this seems a rather remote possibility. The underpass wasn't even placed on the "menu" for the upcoming $200 million fund-raising campaign until student leaders raised a ruckus last week. How could any $200 million wish list NOT include such a vital campus improvement?

State likes to bill itself as the "People's University." It's a title that rings hollow in the ears of people in wheelchairs.

Teaching excellence should be rewarded, professors say be an unintentional de-emphasis on teaching.

"But, I don't think it needs to be that way. We can have both a world-class teaching institution and a world-class research institution."

"N.C. State can excel in both areas," he said.

Tharp said that faculty members can be rewarded for excellence in teaching based on teacher evaluation forms completed by students each semester.

Associate Provost Murray Downs said, "It has happened. The university's stature as a research institution has increased."

But Downs said the university values teaching, too.

"Historically we have done everything we could and looked for better ways for senior faculty to give recognition and rewards for effective teaching," he said.

"In working with Wheeler's committee, we will continue to find new ways to make sure that teaching is rewarded," he said.

another investigation, headed by Chancellor Bruce Poulton, but that Poulton probably knew of their research.

Dean D.F. Bateman of Agriculture and Life Sciences said, "We reviewed the case in question and wanted to release a statement that we have complete confidence in the faculty."

He said it could be detrimental to the university if the situation is not cleared up soon.

Pack pressure defense wears down Maryland

By Tom Olsen
Senior Staff Writer

Chris Corchiani and Kelsey Weems apply pressure to Maryland guard Greg Nared. The Pack defense forced the Terrapins to commit 19 turnovers and limited Maryland to 41.3 percent shooting from the floor.

COLLEGE PARK, Md. — An emotional Maryland Terrapin team had "upset" on their minds in the opening minutes Sunday afternoon against N.C. State Wolfpack at Cole Field House.

Maryland came into the game seeking their first ACC victory and a halt to their eight-game losing streak.

However, a high pressure defense and up-tempo offense by NC State's 15th ranked basketball team changed their minds. The Wolfpack wore the Terps into the floor boards as State cruised to a 90-67 victory.

"We thought we could get them in a transition game and wear them down," said sophomore point guard Chris Corchiani.

Corchiani directed State's play at both ends of the court, scoring 12 points, dishing out nine assists while recording three steals. State picked the Terrapin pockets for 10 steals and forced 19 turnovers.

While the Wolfpack offense was directed from the point, guard Rodney Monroe and forward Brian Howard supplied the fire power, each scoring 21 points. Senior forward Chucky Brown added 18.

"Our kids really executed our game plan today," head coach Jim Valvano said. "We felt that with (Walt) Williams on the bench, giving Maryland a little less depth, we had to keep the tempo up. We're a small team. We can't let people play a half court game and pound the ball inside."

Our kids really executed our game plan today. We felt that with (Walt) Williams on the bench giving Maryland a little less depth, we had to keep the tempo up. We're a small team. We can't let people play a half court game and pound the ball inside.

Jim Valvano
Head Coach

Maryland did just that and exploded for nine points in the first two minutes, behind Brian Jerrod Mustaf's inside play. Mustaf scored 19 points on the game to lead the Terrapin attack.

State went scoreless until Brian Howard scored after two and a half minutes of play.

The Pack turned up the pressure on offense and crept back into the game behind a Monroe three-pointer and a Corchiani free throw to make the score 9-6.

The Terps continued to look inside for their scoring. Behind Massenburg and Mustaf, the Terps clung to a 11-6 lead.

But Wolfpack spark plug Kelsey Weems began to take his toll. Weems intercepted a Maryland pass and cruised in for a slam dunk. A Weems lay-up after a Mustaf bucket made the score 13-10.

"Weems was a catalyst for us," Valvano said. "At one point I think we had four guards in and we were really able to put on the pressure."

Howard followed a Massenburg shot with a three-pointer, then hit a two-pointer to tie the game at 15-15.

Monroe fouled Maryland guard John Johnson and Johnson sank his both free throws to give the Terps a 17-15 advantage. This would be the last lead for Maryland.

The Wolfpack's high tempo offense began clicking as the pack scored 10 straight points for a 25-17 lead. Monroe led the State run with another three pointer and a regular bucket.

State and Maryland battled to a 37-31 score, until State's pressing defense held the Terps scoreless for the rest of the half while adding seven points to their own lead to close the half at 44-31.

The Pack opened the second half with a Howard bucket, but Massenburg answered with a slam and a jumper to draw within 11.

State's offense went on a 10-point spurt as the Terrapins became gun-shy as they worked down the shot clock searching for answer to State's clinging defense.

Maryland's meager 12 for 22 foul line shooting continually kept their offense at bay.

Mustaf and Massenburg's inside play could not keep up with the racing Pack as Monroe, Howard and Brown padded the Wolfpack lead to 22 with just over 11 minutes left in the game. The Wolfpack lead reached 28, its widest margin, at 76-48 with nine minutes left in the game.

Soon the Wolfpack bench began parading into the lineup, with walk-on Roland Whitley entering the game for the final moment.

The Pack remained tied for first place in the ACC with UNC, while the Terps sunk lower in the cellar at 0-6 in the ACC.

Wolfpack Women suffer first ACC loss at Maryland

By Calvin Hall
Senior Staff Writer

COLLEGE PARK, Md. — Although the Lady Terrapins of Maryland beat State Saturday, the Wolfpack Women still hold an edge in the ACC standings.

But the seventh-ranked Lady Terps have the edge in experience, something they showed in their 76-66 victory over the 13th-ranked Wolfpack Women at Cole Field House.

"It really wasn't a game, Maryland outplayed us," said head coach Kay Yow. "They just executed better all the way around."

State remains a half-game ahead of Maryland in the conference standings. The Pack is 14-3, 7-1 in the conference, while Maryland is 15-2 and 6-1.

The Lady Terps began executing on State right from the start as senior guard Deanna Tate, a Gastonia, N.C., native, grabbed the opening tip and dashed to the hoop for a layup at the 19:56 mark.

About 20 seconds later, Tate repeated the move. Maryland was up 4-0 and Tate was just beginning. She would finish with a game-high 27 points, Andrea Stinson put State on the scoreboard with a jumper from the right baseline to cut the lead to 4-2.

But the Pack could not withstand the triple assault of Lady Terps Tate, Olympian Vicky Bullett and sophomore guard Carla Holmes. By the 11:12 mark, Maryland was ahead 26-16 and State was forced to call a timeout.

After the timeout, State was able to cut into Maryland's lead. Stinson and Gerri Roback hit from the outside, while Sharon Manning, Rhonda Mapp and Kerri Hobbs banged inside. With about four minutes left in the first half, the Wolfpack Women surged back to tie at 33-33. After that, the Terps scored seven unanswered points to pull ahead 40-33. The first half ended with the Lady Terrapins ahead 47-35.

"They (Maryland), just dominated that half in terms of being on the boards, getting to the free-throw line and getting the shots that they wanted to get," Yow said.

The first-half statistics backed Yow's statement.

The Lady Terps shot 64.5 percent from the floor, making 20 of 31 shots while State hit only 42.1 percent. They pulled down 23 rebounds while State got only 10.

In addition, the Wolfpack Women were whistled for five personal fouls to Maryland's three. However, the Terps had six attempts at the charity stripe, making five count. State did not get to the free-throw line in the first half.

In the second half, State could get no closer than seven as Maryland continued its domination of the Wolfpack Women. Maryland gained its biggest lead of the

The 19th-ranked N.C. State wrestling team dominated Virginia last Thursday night in Charlottesville to move its ACC record to 2-1.

The Wolfpack won seven of 10 individual matches for a 28-12 overall score.

With the win, head coach Bob Guzzo has 199 victories during his 15 years at State. He is 199-65-2.

For the Wolfpack, Ricky Strausbaugh decided Bob

Joe Cesari

Williams upended Mark Hansen 5-2 at 167 and fourth-rated Brian Jackson won by forfeit at heavyweight.

The Cavaliers are 1-1 in the ACC and 6-2 overall.

On Sunday, 11th-ranked Iowa State beat the Wolfpack 27-15 in Ames, Iowa.

Winners for the Wolfpack were Stokes with a 6-1 victory over Gary McCall at 126. Cesari with a pin at 6:51 against Mike Moreno at 142 and Jackson with a pin against Chris Knutsen at 1:25 at heavyweight.

With the loss to the Cyclones, State is 9-7-2 overall. Iowa State is 5-4-1.

Howard model of consistency for 15th-ranked Wolfpack

By Scott Deuel
Staff Writer

Junior forward Brian Howard has quietly become a vital component in Jim Valvano's Big Red Machine.

The Winston-Salem native consistently gets the job done, and he demonstrated his consistency against Duke. He had 23 points, two rebounds and three assists in Thursday night's 88-73 victory.

"Without question, the unsung hero of this team is Brian Howard," Valvano said.

Howard made eight of 11 shots from the field and connected on two attempts from the three-point line Thursday.

Howard averaged a little over seven points a game last season, but he clearly established himself as a scoring threat this season.

"The shot was there for me and that's good when I can score like that," he said. "On this year's team there's more room to shoot, with Vinny and Shack gone. This year, I'm trying to score more."

Despite his success at the forward position, Howard receives little credit behind the names of senior forward Chucky Brown and sophomore guards Chris Corchiani and Rodney Monroe. Even so, Howard does not mind it being that way.

"I like it the way it is because I'm a low-key guy," Howard said.

The stress on Valvano and his players imposed by the allegations of misconduct in "Personal Fouls" has been enormous, but Howard feels Valvano and the team have come together.

"It's good we're all close," Howard said. "We like our coaches and each other. We pick Coach Valvano up and he picks us up."

The men's and women's swimming teams easily defeated Furman Saturday in Carmichael Natatorium.

The men, now 12-1 on the season, defeated the Paladins, now 6-5, 104-62.

Winners for the Pack included Jim Forrester in the 200 freestyle, Mike Letz in the 1000 free, Dan Judge in the 50 free, Brian Dowling in the 200 IM and Andy Creeger in the 100 free.

The State women won 102-86 to improve their record to 7-6 for the season.

Sabrina Hulet, with a first in the 200 free and a second in the 100 free, and Julie Pananen, with a first in the 1000 free and a second in the 500 free, led the team.

Melinda Moxin recorded a victory in the 50 free for the women's only other first place win.

Head football coach Dick Sheridan received 10 oral commitments from highly-touted high school players last week.

The national signing date for recruits is Feb. 8 and the 10 commitments this week brings the Wolfpack total to 18.

Heading the list of commitments are Greensboro Page linebacker Tyler Lawrence and Canton Pisgah offensive lineman Mike Price. Both recruits picked State over ACC rival Clemson.

Lawrence (6-3, 215) is considered the top linebacker in North Carolina and was a USA Today honorable mention all-American. In the Shrine Bowl, he had 11 tackles. After picking State, Lawrence canceled planned recruiting visits to North Carolina, Tennessee and South Carolina.

Price (6-5, 200), also a Shrine Bowl participant, can bench press over 400 pounds, according to his coach Carroll Wright.

Other Shrine Bowl participants planning to join the Pack are defensive lineman Eric Swann (6-5, 285) of Western Harnett and Spartanburg offensive linemen Eric Taylor (6-4, 260) and Todd Ward (6-2, 250). Swann was recently named to the Super Prep all-American team.

Gymnasts avenge loss to Longwood

By Brooke Barbee
Staff Writer

Though plagued by illness, the N.C. State gymnastics team pulled out an easy win over Longwood College Friday night in Carmichael Gymnasium. The Wolfpack won every individual event and the all-around title in their blowout victory, 172.35-156.55.

Sophomore Karen Tart led the Pack attack. Of the four events, she won three: the uneven bars, the balance beam and the floor exercise, with a 9.45, 8.45 and 9.3, respectively. In addition, she won the all-around with a score of 36.2. State freshmen Jill Bishop and Carey Buttlar both had a 9.2 on the vault for the leading score.

Buttlar and sophomore Jennifer Jansen had been out all week with the flu and were unable to practice with the team. Their participation was therefore limited to the vault and uneven bars. In fact, after the Wolfpack established a sizable lead over the Longwood Lancers, Buttlar was withdrawn from the balance beam and floor exercise events, leaving only five competitors in each.

Coach Mark Stevenson was pleased that his team was able to overcome the obstacles that the illnesses caused.

"I was pleased with some areas of our performance, but not with others," Stevenson said. "The balance beam really hurt us. I think it will just take a few meets for our freshmen and sophomores to really gain experience."

Indeed, the Pack's team score of 39.35 on the balance beam was much lower than their 43.45 score last week against Radford University. However, the Lancers were unable to convert the opportunity into a score. In fact, they only received one score over an 8.7 in the meet—a 9.05 by Natalie Taylor, the last competitor in the floor exercise.

The Pack's next meet will be in Carmichael Feb. 4 as they take on George Washington University in hopes of building on their 2-0 record.

game with 13:34 left in the game on a Tate basket that made the score 57-39.

For the game, Maryland out-rebounded State 45-28. Forward Subrena Rivers and center Christy Winters grabbed 12 each while Bullett hauled down 10. For State, Mapp had seven rebounds and Manning six.

The Pack was also two of four from the free-throw line for the game. On the other hand, the Lady Terps were 13 of 17.

Stinson was the leading scorer for the Wolfpack Women with 19. Manning was the only other team member to score in double figures, scoring 15.

"They did a great job of stopping our transition game," Yow said. "They stopped the transition game that we have had almost all season and still dominated on the boards. I would have thought coming into the game that they wouldn't be able to do both."

Lady Terrapin head coach Chris Weller believed that it was her team's experience that helped them to victory.

"We had the edge in experience," Weller said. "But they had the edge in terms of strength. Physically, they're a bigger, stronger team than we are, but (we hoped that) hopefully our experience would help us."

"They're a very strong team right now for the end of January and I'm sure they'll be even stronger come tournament time. I just hope that they don't get too much experience by the end of the year."

State receives 10 commitments

The Pack has also received commitments from running back Aubrey Shaw (5-11, 205) of Fork Union (Va.) Military Academy, offensive lineman Steve Pokrant (6-3, 255) of Pittsburgh, center Chuck Cole (6-5, 270) of Ocala, Fla. and strong safety Mike Nichols of Cincinnati. Shaw rushed for 1,057 yards and seven touchdowns while passing for six touchdowns.

"I know N.C. State has a lot of running backs and a lot of people like Anthony Barbour, but Aubrey is going to turn some heads," Fork Union head coach John Shuman said. "He's a national back."

Recruiting analyst Tom Lemming named Pokrant an honorable mention all-American. Pokrant has also been named to "The Pittsburgh Post Gazette's" Fabulous 22 two years straight.

Smith tells Southern story, publishes novels of reality

By Tom Olsen
Senior Staff Writer

Editor's note: This is the fourth in a series of articles about N.C. State English professors who have published mass-market literature.

"It's easier to write a novel than anything else," says N.C. State creative writing instructor Lee Smith. "You have a lot more room to screw up."

But screwing up isn't too much of a problem for Smith, as she completes her seventh novel, "Fair and Tender Ladies."

Over the years Smith has earned the "Southern writer" label, one that might be slightly misleading.

"I don't think of myself as a Southern writer," the associate professor says. "I think of myself as an Appalachian writer."

Smith grew up in the southwest Appalachian mountains of Virginia, near the Tennessee border.

"I grew up in the South, but not the South of Faulkner," she says.

Her South did not contain the stereotypical rich landowners, but families whose support came from coal mining. Money wasn't the only difference.

"There were no houses with columns, no blacks, no guilt — no racial guilt. It was not the kind of South you think of."

Smith began writing short stories in college and wrote her first novel when she was a senior.

"I started real young," she says. "I was published when I was 21. I was real lucky in that sense."

Smith didn't start out writing about the Appalachian South where she grew up. She avoided it.

"First, I was interested in getting away," she says.

Her stories were set in non-specific places until she turned 30, and she then returned to her roots, to her Appalachian background. She started to explore her background in "Black Mountain Breakdown," her fourth novel.

"That's when I first started writing about where I'm from."

After graduation, Smith decided against graduate studies and began to work for a newspaper. She continued her journalism career until she had children and then she began teaching.

In addition to creative writing courses, Smith also teaches studies in fiction and freshman English.

Living Colour breaks rock stereotypes

Band mixes rock, funk, rap in show

Riding its new wave of successes, Living Colour brought its act to Chapel Hill's Memorial Hall Friday night.

Living Colour — vocalist Corey Glover, guitarist Vernon Reid, drummer William Calhoun and bass guitarist Muzz Skillings — gave the youthful campus crowd their money's worth.

Dan Pawlowski

Concert Review

The band's debut LP, "Vivid," dominated the playlist. The quartet opened with the hard-rocking track "Middle Man," and by the show's second track, "Desperate People," it was clear that Reid's guitar solos would play a large role in the act.

An all-black rock 'n' roll band isn't exactly what music industry typecasters expect. In a pre-concert interview, Glover addressed the stereotype barrier.

"Get off our backs," Glover said. "Let anybody be who they are. Be yourself. That's what it's about — having a chance to express yourself in any way you see fit."

"Through music you can express yourself in any way you know how. And it's not a visual thing, but a spiritual and internal thing."

But success has allowed the band members to express their emotions. Like the group's recent MTV video, "Cult of Personality," the musicians displayed an energetic live display.

While Living Colour's music is known for its heavy-metal sound, tunes like "Memories Can't Wait" and "Funny Vibe" show the group's talent for funk and even rap sound.

No matter what their instrumental tunes, the native New Yorkers' lyrics are from the heart. "A lot of our music is basically what we've experienced and dealt with," Glover said.

"Songs like 'Open Letter (To a Landlord)' touch us personally because it's what we go through. We see that sort of thing happening all the time."

During the band's finale, "What's Your Favorite Color?," the audience put the song's question to rest, as several fans came onstage and danced along with the band.

In a pre-concert interview, Glover told a reporter to "Get off our backs. Let anybody be who they are." Measles withdrawal OK as long as there's a john AUTRYVILLE — I'm so sick. I've come to this town that produces nothing but dead people. I think I'm experiencing withdrawal symptoms from all those measles shots I had. My body craves vaccination.

But I won't take the day off or have some cheap imitation writer fill in for me, because doing this column is the only thing that keeps life alive in this decaying small time star.

And the knowledge that there's a full roll of toilet paper in the stall.

Twins?

At Ward's party someone was wearing a T-shirt of Buckwheat with "Tracy Chapman Live" written on it. Funny how some haircuts come back in vogue.

Crazy Touch

The Number Three act on my list of concerts I kicked myself for missing is coming back. And I don't plan on blowing it again.

The Feeties will be playing the Art Center in Carboro tomorrow night.

"It's Only Life," off their "Only Life" album, was last fall's best single.

See CHANCELLOR, page 7

Joe Corey Party Favors...

Of course, going to Ward's party and doing numerous hits of substances I can legally abuse might also have contributed to this wonderful feeling inside me at the moment.

I've got to run to the bathroom. Be back.

That was quick.

The worst thought is that everybody on this campus will be feeling like rotten potatoes and the sewer system will burst.

Technician Opinion

January 30, 1989

A paper that is entirely the product of the student body becomes at once the official organ through which the thoughts, the activity and in fact the very life of the campus are registered. It is the mouthpiece through which the students themselves talk. College life without its journal is blank.

Everyone is affected when the library's budget is cut

In this decade of deficits, budget cuts and overall economic confusion, there have been many casualties — Social Security, education, Medicare and Medicaid, etc., etc. The cuts in education have affected thousands of students and would-be students across the nation. The trend against education continued when the N.C. General Assembly struck a blow against N.C. State's libraries.

The libraries' 1987-89 request for funding, along with a second request, were denied by the legislature earlier this year. As a result, library officials asked faculty members to identify which research journal subscriptions should be canceled to allow the libraries to remain within their budget. Susan Nutter, director of NCSU's libraries, said subscriptions totaling about $125,000 have been cut — many of them journals that faculty members use to stay informed within their areas of study.

Libraries are needed for use as research and reference points for people all over the world. The library of a university is that institution's very heart and soul. Both students and faculty use the library for research and as a way of finding out what is going on in their respective fields of study. Journals provide that medium of information.

The libraries' budget should not be cut. If anything, it should be increased. But that is probably too much to ask in this new age of "let's see who can build the biggest and most expensive unneeded coliseum" competition.

The most recent cuts affected the supply of journal subscriptions. Nutter said if the library has to withstand any more cuts, it will affect core materials. It doesn't take much to imagine the kind of effects that could have.

Video possible supplement for summer orientation

In their never-ending quest to better inform students about opportunities at N.C. State, the Department of Student Development has gone video.

All incoming freshmen and transfers will receive a video highlighting each department in Student Affairs. The video will arrive in April as part of the regular orientation package sent to incoming students.

Mike Borden, assistant director of Student Development, said that the video is an excellent way to enhance the orientation process. We agree. Students who view the video should have a more comprehensive understanding of what activities are available on NCSU's campus.

One of the best aspects of the video is its price. Since the video is sponsored by area companies, students will not be charged extra to have it added to the orientation package. In this era of astronomical costs, the last thing students need is another hand reaching in their wallets.

But with all the talk that went around last semester about moving summer orientation to fall, the Academic Deans and other administrators shouldn't get any bright-eyed, bushy-tailed ideas. This video, or any other video, no matter how comprehensive, should not be used as an additional excuse for changing summer orientation to fall.

But the video itself is an excellent idea. Now let's see if Student Development buys everyone a VCR.

Hollick's views on abortion ignorant

There are many people in this world who think as Deryl Hollick does. They are as dangerous as they are ignorant. Let me explain myself. On Monday, Jan. 23, Hollick's letter condemning abortion was printed in the Technician. His arguments were obviously not thought through, and that is why I described his point of view as ignorant. There are a few things that need to be said here.

One great thing about this country is our freedom of religion, a right that is taken very seriously and exercised daily, as it should be. Hollick exemplifies this freedom in his letter by quoting from the Bible and expressing his religious point of view. However, he has completely confounded his argument by neglecting to do one important thing. That is to respect the views of others.

I respect Hollick's point of view, not because I agree with it (since I most certainly do not agree), but because it is diversity that makes humanity so wonderful and unique. And also because I feel that it is my duty as a human being to respect the rights and beliefs of others.

Hollick uses a religious perspective to condemn the practice of abortion. By doing so, he is attempting to force his beliefs on those around him. That is not only ignorant, but un-American. It is wonderful for Hollick if he has found a set of beliefs that make him comfortable with his existence. But he fails to realize that simply because they are his beliefs, this does not make them the correct ones. He seems not to see them as beliefs, but as facts.

Since it is impossible to answer such religious questions, we have no right to state our beliefs as facts. People often forget that religions are created for the purpose of answering certain unanswerable questions. It may be healthy to have opinions about basic religious questions, but experiencing these beliefs as truths is symptomatic of very serious delusions.

But what, to me, is the most frightening facet about the arguments against abortion, is this matter of dominance and submission. Obviously, the entire women's movement threatened the very foundation of the nuclear family. I applaud this, because what it means to me is that women finally are being accorded the rights of other human beings. Maybe this is threatening to men like Hollick, since they will no longer be in absolute control of all situations. They are no longer dominant. I see no reason for men to be considered dominant simply because they cannot bear children. It is easy for me to see how men such as Hollick, who seem to be insecure unless able to feel superior, would want to force women into submission by outlawing abortion.

Hollick has obviously never read accounts of 13-year-old children inserting coat hangers into their bodies, severing major organs and bleeding to death, simply because they were young and uneducated, didn't understand about birth control and didn't have the option of abortion.

He has obviously never worked with such profoundly retarded children that they can't do anything for themselves, and will remain in a vegetative state for the rest of their lives. And he obviously doesn't listen when he hears accounts of parents who force their children to become prostitutes because of their low economic status, or the thousands of accounts of parents beating their unwanted children. I would much rather know that a couple could have aborted the unwanted fetus, than to allow them to torture the children for years and years.

I personally don't think that I could ever go through with an abortion if I became pregnant. But if I could help it, I would never allow others to make that decision for me. I feel very sorry for Hollick, if he has such a lack of control in his life that he has to try to give me the option of controlling women, but I personally would never allow someone to have that type of control over me.

There is one last comment that Hollick makes that really upsets me. He says, "Today it is generally accepted that a woman's education, career, checkbook balance, and way of life are more important than any child she may be carrying. If so, then human life has lost its value to us." Of course he can confidently say this! He can never get pregnant. His entire education, career, and way of life would never be threatened if he got someone pregnant. If a woman had to give up everything she held dear in her life, just because some people thought that she shouldn't have the right to decide on an abortion, then we would be reverting to the subordinate days when women were owned by their husbands. That's not democratic. That's just disgusting.

Women need, deserve right to choice

All right, this is it. I have finally had enough of this abortion debate. One cannot pick up a newspaper or watch a newscast without being besieged by stories of self-righteous "Pro-Lifers" (I use the term loosely) calling for the Roe vs. Wade decision to be overturned in the interest of saving "innocent lives."

Deryl Hollick, in his reply to Jeanie Taft's Jan. 18 Technician article, makes the same mistake that most Pro-Lifers do — he seems to forget that there are many more lives at stake than just that of the fetus.

Hollick says (Technician Forum, Jan. 23) that Pro-Choicers "have no concern for and ignore the rights of the baby." Wrong. Pro-Choicers may not necessarily be in favor of abortion; they simply believe that a woman should have the right to decide what happens to her body. If a woman gets pregnant and she absolutely does not want and cannot take care of the future baby, why should she be forced to endure the humiliation, embarrassment and pain that an unwanted pregnancy can cause?

Simply because someone decided that her body is, in essence, not her own but the fetus', should she be required to carry that unwanted pregnancy to term? I ask all of you "Pro-Lifers": how would you feel if you knew that the only reason your mother had you was because she was forced to — because she had no other choice?

The point is, and Taft said it well, that abortion is going to happen. Making it illegal will not stop thousands of women in this country from trying, one way or another, to rid themselves of unwanted fetuses. Whether or not you are against abortion, you should realize that there is no need for two or more lives to be ruined because of an unwanted pregnancy. Have you forgotten about the father of the fetus? What about the parents of the girl (if she is young)?

And what about HER chances to have a life, too? I know women who have said that they would have committed suicide if abortion had not been legal when they got pregnant.

Where is the logic in making abortion illegal if the alternatives for women are coathangers, back-alley "doctors" and suicide? Why is it all right for a living, breathing and thinking woman, but not an unwanted, unformed and presumably unintelligent fetus to die because of an unplanned pregnancy?

Besides, Hollick, who are you to tell any woman — or anyone, for that matter — what she can and cannot do with her own body? Who gave you or any "Pro-Lifer" the right to control women's lives? Who do you think you are?

Chi O's praised for clean-up

I would like to thank the Alpha Kappa chapter of Chi Omega for their great clean-up work along Aveny Ferry Road.

I noticed the new Adopt-A-Highway sign with their name on it only a week ago, and then last Saturday the teams were filling up garbage bags on either side of the road. They weren't just picking up the obvious litter of paper, bottles and cans by the curbs (of which there is a lot); they were going into the brush and pulling out all sorts of garbage. They were hard workers, and the roadside now looks wonderful.

It seems to me that people usually think of parties and socializing when they hear of Greek organizations. From my understanding, the groups are really established to encourage outstanding students to excel in their activities, which often include community service. The Adopt-A-Highway program is a very visible type of community service and I hope that other fraternities and sororities will participate as well as this chapter has. They could gain publicity and goodwill through this very worthwhile service.

One quick note for any groups involved in the Adopt-A-Highway program: It is worthwhile to separate all glass containers and aluminum cans from the garbage you collect on the roadside. Since a large portion of the litter is beer and pop bottles and cans, you can clean up the roadside and our environment by recycling those items. They can be dropped off at our local recycling centers, or cans can be taken to Reynolds Recycling Centers for cash for your organization.

Keep up the good work!
