NCSU students speak out for and against war

By J. Keith Jordan
Staff Writer

For the second time in seven days, hundreds of people filled the Brickyard Wednesday to express their opinions about United States military action against Iraq.

Students wave a flag in support of the troops in the Gulf.

Unlike last week's protest, however, no shouting matches broke out between speakers and the crowd. Most of the speakers reflected the mood of the overwhelmingly war-supporting audience, but even anti-war speakers were encouraged by organizers to present their sides of the issue.

"I do believe these (war protesters) have a right to express their opinion," said rally planner Kevin Carter. Part of the reason for the demonstration was the unwillingness of war protesters to allow others to speak at their rally last Wednesday, Carter said.

Public Safety officers estimated the crowd at about 500. When one speaker asked everyone in the audience opposed to the war effort to raise his or her hands, only about four people did so.

The rally was not without debate, however.

"Before we commit one man to death, sanctions should be tried," said war opponent Van Simpson. "The words 'give peace a chance' still stand."

A long procession of speakers, most of them crowd members who stepped forward spontaneously, covered topics ranging from racism to flag burning. One speaker compared Iraq's invasion of Kuwait with previous treatment of Native Americans by the United States.

About 70 people gathered Wednesday night in below-freezing temperatures to show support for our troops in the Middle East with a candlelight vigil.

The crowd assembled, said prayers, sang patriotic songs and held a moment of silence outside the Student Center after the basketball game against Duke.

"I felt this to be the appropriate thing to do," said event organizer Eric Johnson. "We need to pull this nation back into one. Only through our support can these guys sustain."

"I feel we have to support the people fighting over there," said Jennifer Younts. "I support Bush and the war. We gave (Saddam Hussein) plenty of time to get out, and he refused. I see no other choice."

With the Naval ROTC Color Guard in the background, the crowd joined in with the quartet, Daughters Anointed in Christ, in singing "The Star Spangled Banner." Hugging each other, they listened silently while Johnson read a letter from Major Bob Caslen of the 101st Artillery Division. The letter, written a week before hostilities began in the Persian Gulf said "The generals know the rules of war, and there are many steps to be taken to play fair. We are getting tired and anxious. We are ready to get underway or get out of here." The people began to weep as a recording of Lee Greenwood's "God Bless the U.S.A." was played. "I have faith in the students," Johnson said, "I think they care."

Students gather outside the Student Center fountain Wednesday night in preparation for the candlelight vigil.

Stafford serves on defense committee

By Asher Husain
Staff Writer

Thomas H. Stafford Jr., vice chancellor for student affairs at N.C. State, has been a member of the Defense Advisory Committee on Women in the Services (DACOWITS) since his three-year appointment in May 1990.

Stafford was nominated for the position in the fall of 1990 by the Commander of the Navy/Marine Corps ROTC for NCSU and the UNC-Chapel Hill, Colonel George Walls.

DACOWITS, a civilian advisory body to the Department of Defense, was created in 1951 to inform the public about the role of women in the military and to address the concerns these women had about life in the armed forces.

Stafford notes that the issues DACOWITS deals with are "many of the same issues that concern women on a college campus," such as sexual harassment and health care needs.

Stafford went through Army ROTC during college, and served as a lieutenant in the Army from 1966 to 1968, with a year spent in Korea. Here at NCSU, part of Stafford's responsibilities include the administration of the ROTC programs.

Stafford has visited many military bases, including the Marine Corps

Air Station at Cherry Point, and has talked to women about concerns. Additionally, he met with most of the women ROTC students at NCSU to discuss these issues.

More recently, DACOWITS has had to concern itself with the issue of women in combat. According to present U.S. military policy, no women are allowed in military units where there is a probability of sending or receiving hostile fire. Consequently, women usually serve in support units, such as fuel supply crews or medical teams.

As Stafford points out, many women are currently deployed in the Middle East. Although they are not in combat units, there is still the potential that the women may have to defend themselves with weapons if attacked. As a result, the whole Gulf could be seen as a combat zone.

There is a wide difference of opinion on this issue among service-women, according to Stafford. Some women indicated that they actually preferred the current rules, and others asserted that a woman should have the opportunity as long as they can fulfill the requirements.

DACOWITS will hold their spring meeting Apr. 21-24 in Washington, D.C. Stafford says the role of women in combat situations will probably be a major issue discussed, especially in light of the war in the Persian Gulf.

Iraqi president Saddam Hussein has been warning the world since August that if there is a war, terrorists all over the world will take action against America and its allies.

The war is here and N.C. State is prepared for any possible threats.

Ralph Harper, director of Public Safety, said NCSU Public Safety has been in communication with state and federal agencies. "We have been briefed," he said. Harper said that he was not expecting any terrorist activity in North Carolina or at NCSU, however, Public Safety is taking precautions anyway.

"We went ahead and heightened our awareness," Harper said.

Harper said Public Safety is maintaining contact with federal agencies in case something does happen. He also said that Public Safety officers have been told to be more aware of unusual activities, especially at public events like basketball games.

In addition, Army, Air Force and Navy ROTC all reported that cadets were told not to wear uniforms to minimize possible conflict between campus groups with different opinions about the war, rather than to protect against the threat of terrorism.

Major Philip Riddle, the Army ROTC battalion commander, said the order not to wear uniforms was part of applying techniques that students are learning in an anti-terrorist threat class. He said students are learning the techniques that military personnel abroad frequently use, including not wearing their uniforms in public and taking different routes to and from work. Riddle said the policy was in effect indefinitely.

Col. James Ferrel of the Air Force ROTC and Lt. Philip Dobbs of the Navy ROTC reported that the change was temporary, and students would go back to wearing uniforms within the next week or so, as soon as things have calmed down.

Both Ferrel and Dobbs reiterated that their main purpose in issuing such an order is to minimize conflict with anti-war groups.

All three officers said that the order not to wear uniforms originated with them.

Physics major Robert A. Brown, 19, is caught letting it all hang out on Hillsborough Street after the basketball game against Duke Wednesday night. Unfortunately for Raleigh Police Officer Lt. James Privette, Brown collided with the officer who was later sent to Wake Medical Center and diagnosed with multiple fractures of his right leg. Brown, a freshman physics major from Jacksonville, N.C., was charged with indecent exposure, assault on a law enforcement officer and resisting arrest. He was released on $1,000 bond. Eric Brandstadter, also 19, was charged with aiding and abetting indecent exposure and was released into his parents' custody on $500 bond. To date, Technician has gathered only the bare facts.

So far, most of NCSU's varsity teams have committed to provide items from their sport signed by team members, said Lindsay Brecher, president of the Captains' Table and former captain of the ladies' soccer team. "We are very enthusiastic about being involved in a student effort to improve the academic development of the university," said Brecher. The Captains' Table is an organization of representatives from all NCSU varsity sport teams whose primary purpose is to act as a liaison between the administration and the athletes.

The organization also promotes NCSU athletics in the community, said Brecher.

A complete list of contest prizes will appear in Technician Monday.

The other new effort to raise money is the sale of T-Shirts featuring the artwork of Technician editorial cartoonist Grey Blackwell.

Each shirt costs $10 and can be purchased at the Friends of the Library office or at the Student Government office.

Support

Speakers in support of soldiers said protests against U.S. involvement in the Persian Gulf crisis hurt the troops' morale.

"These people don't realize how much pain they've caused," said speaker Angel Richardson.

Another speaker, however, said protests should not cause a problem for the soldiers. Andy Ford said that if he were serving in the gulf, he would be happy that people could protest.

Carter said that the media, particularly television, tends to focus on protesters despite the larger number of supporters of the president's current Middle East policy.

"One of the television stations thought this was an anti-war protest, and they were actually disappointed when they found out it was in support of the troops," Carter said.

Carter said that, to the best of his knowledge, the Wednesday rally was the first pro-peace demonstration at any college or university.

Battling with romantic emotions to keep a friend

Dear Nate & Amy,
To make a long story short, I've grown to care very deeply for a good friend of mine. All but one of my friends, including my reason for writing to you, tell me that it never works between friends. My one friend of contrary opinion says that it works best between friends.

It could be that my feelings have me in blinders, but I sometimes get the impression that my friend feels the same about me and is just afraid of what might happen. I think we are both afraid we won't be friends when it's over. I think we will always be friends. If we were not, I would be a lot worse off than I am now. I really believe that it could work if given a chance, but I can't convince my friend.

Even if you advise me to remain just good friends, it will take a while for my feelings to return to "normal." I've been fighting these feelings myself for more than a year, only recently deciding to give in to them.

What do you have for someone who just can't stop carin'?

Hopeless

Dear Hopeless,

[N&A] First of all, we, Nate and Amy, have no idea whether Hopeless is a male or female. So for the sake of pronoun usage, we, Nate and Amy, will assume that Hopeless is female pining over a Prince Charming.

[A] I understand your dilemma. I've had several friends I would have loved to go out with, but I was scared I would lose them as friends.

[N] Gee, Amy, I wouldn't happen to be one of those dear friends of yours, now would I?

[A] I plead the fifth.

[N] No comment.

Hopeless, if I had just a dollar bill for every friend I had the hots for, I would be a financially secure individual. However, for the sake of keeping the friendship strong, I found I had to keep my hormones in check.

[A] It can be difficult to keep those hormones in check, but if you really like this person and desire to go out with him, I say go for it.

The Wisdom of Nate & Amy

[N] I, on the other hand, advise you to be cautious. It seems to me that you have gone to dinners and movies with this fellow before and now want some sort of commitment.

I am bothered by the part of your letter where you say:

"I sometimes get the impression that my friend feels the same about me and is just afraid of what might happen."

This tells me that he has not come out and told you his desire for a commitment. If you are looking for hints of his feelings, you could be seeing things that are not there.

In other words, he probably just wants you as his friend and you, in your smitten state, thinks he wants more to perpetuate your fantasy.

[A] Awfully long-winded, aren't you, Nate?

Anytime you have to look for signs of the other person's feelings you are definitely in for a let-down. I know from personal experience.

[N] My advice to you, Hopeless, is just what you don't want to hear. Put your feelings aside and keep this fellow as your friend. Since friends are difficult to come by these days, you need to hold on to the ones you have for dear life.

If it ain't broke, don't fix it!

[A] But, if he ever does vocally tell you he wants more, then tell him how you've been feeling for all this time. Friends can be great to date.

[N] I have to agree. If he is ready, he will let you know in his own way. Meanwhile, be thankful for what you have in this guy. And by all means, don't just blurt out your feelings about him to him.

[A] Try telling your feelings to a mutual friend.

[N] I think she already has, Amy. Read the letter.

[A] I mean, try planting some juicy information to a friend you know will go and blab to Prince Charming.

[N] Oh, I get it! Instead of approaching this guy with her feelings, Hopeless should let a friend do it for her! This could get dangerous, but what a way to break the ice!

[A] If Prince Charming is indeed as smitten as you are, Hopeless, he will come to you and confirm the rumor that was planted on him by the mutual friend. Judging from the tone of his voice, you will know how he feels about you.

[N] Come again?

[A] If he is elated about hearing the good news of your feelings, Hopeless, then by all means, reap the benefits! However, if he comes to you with a sarcastic tone, you had better take a long, cold shower and kiss commitment goodbye.

[N] But you had better be careful about the strings you would be pulling. If he ever discovers that you manipulated him to approach you, he could become irritated with you.

[A] It seems to me that you know more about this situation than we, Nate and Amy, know. We can only help you see your options.

[N] Exactly, Hopeless. The feelings we are talking about are as unpredictable as the weather. Just follow your heart and see where it will lead you. If things don't work out between you and your friend, don't give up on love altogether. Perhaps some higher power is setting you up for someone better.

[A] If it isn't in the stars, then don't force anything to happen. You may lose a wonderful friend if you aren't careful.

Be wise!

Nate & Amy

A1 I think it's excessive, in terms of saturation of air time. I think the problem is that it is over-analyzed. ... But I think the media (themselves) should have greater access to what's going on ... and not be tied down to a hotel room.

A2 I think it can. It might serve as an example to the legislature ... of our commitment.

A1 It's good that (the media) are over there, but too much will make the controversy a little more in depth. We're not able to focus on one person or medium.

A2 It will give State a good name. I don't know exactly what it's going to, but in the long run it will help us out to say that we gave the money.

A1 I have no comment about the media coverage of the war.

A2 I feel the library endowment fund is good for getting the point across that we need more money. As far as how effective it is, it's too hard to tell because we are in such dire need of money.

A1 I think they've done a very good job in the coverage that they've been able to get out of the Middle East. I think they need the (Israeli) censors to protect future positions and attacks. I wonder if maybe they're trying to boost the morale of the people here by not telling all).

A2 Actually, I really don't know.

A1 I think the media coverage has been pretty good on CNN. I don't think they know everything going on, but that's for the safety of our events. I think they're doing a good job with the information they have.

A2 I really don't use the library too much, but I would hope that it could ... be something positive.

A1 It's as good as they can safely give us. I feel everything they're being given they turn around and give to us, but they're obviously not given the whole story.

A2 I don't feel the endowment fund will do anything, positive or negative unless the entire campus contributes, but that's rare.

Respect others' opinion

Wednesday in the Brickyard, there was a rally for everyone that supported the troops. Many students and other concerned people stood up and voiced their support for George Bush and his handling of the Gulf Crisis. Some brought up the point that it is too late to pull out of Saudi Arabia now, because that would destroy our troops, Saudi Arabia and Kuwait. Others noted that the entire world tried to negotiate with Saddam Hussein without results. And still others mentioned the U.N. and Congressional resolutions.

However, most of the speakers did little more than name calling. People who disagree with the war and George Bush were called the "peace crowd" and were characterized as "throw-backs to the '60s." Others called them smelly hippies who have their heads stuck in a body orifice.

Technician staff is divided nearly in half, but according to polls 80 percent of the American people support George Bush. Supporting him is good, but calling dissenters names isn't. If someone disagrees with you on the Gulf Crisis, don't call them names because it doesn't help the matter any. After all, why should students let the actions of one man tear apart friends, suitmates and classmates? As adults, we should be above that. If someone disagrees with you, respect his opinion.

Party on the Brickyard

There are some traditions at N.C. State that are worth rekindling. After five long years the Brickyard, or as it is officially known, the University Plaza, once again belongs to the students of NCSU.

After the NCSU basketball team defeated Duke Wednesday night, a throng of ecstatic Wolfpack fans renewed the recent tradition of taking Hillsborough St. Now that the Brickyard has reopened, State fans have no reason to risk life or limb dodging cars on the Hillsborough St.

Raleigh Police and N.C. State Public Safety officers do their best in crowd control, but it should not be their responsibility to maintain control of Hillsborough St. Every time the Wolfpack gets a big basketball win.

After the initial crowd dispersed from Hillsborough St., many Wolfpack fans who were left chose to move the celebration to the Brickyard. The rest of the Wolfpack faithful should take the cue from these fans and keep the celebration on campus where it belongs.

Some of the best celebrations on campus have occurred on the Brickyard. Wolfpack fans can harken back to 1983 when NCSU marched through the NCAA Tournament and won the national championship. For four gripping weeks the campus gathered in the Brickyard to celebrate the good fortunes of the basketball team.

Traditionally the Brickyard has been the focal point for student gatherings and celebrations. It now time for Wolfpack fans to realize that partying on the Brickyard not only is steeped in tradition, but it is the smart thing to do.

We're all still friends

Wednesday was the day of the troop support rally in the Brickyard. For about an hour and a half, different people spoke and presented their arguments, etc. After a while, the students who support peace responded to certain remarks and numerous arguments and name-calling crowds. However, at six o'clock, the war was put aside for a few hours to watch a basketball game. Students with different political views stood beside each other to cheer the Wolfpack. After we kicked Duke's butt, these same students journeyed to Hillsborough St. to celebrate. All this goes to show that everyone can relax for a while to forget the war. It felt good not to worry about casualties on our side, Israel's involvement or Iraq's missile capability. This is not to say that the game was more important than the Gulf Crisis, but it does show that students, regardless of their differing political opinions, can put their differences aside and have a good time.

Protesters accomplishing nothing

Ted McDaniel

Opinion Columnist

Make no mistake about it, I am no supporter of Republicans in general or President Bush in particular (and I might add that at the die-in one of the people trying to bring them back to life and support the war was James Jones, the former head of Students for Gantt).

However, my disdain for Bush has not blinded me to the undemocratic nature of most of the "peace protests." The majority (around 80 percent) has spoken, and they have spoken in favor of a declaration of war. The protesters have no legitimate reason for going outside the political process, and, in fact, are attempting to establish a Tyranny of the Minority.

I am not in any way directing this column to the organizers or participants of last Thursday's rally on the Brickyard. That was a legitimate exercise of political discourse. In most of the nation, however, protests were not political events but mob actions, in which point was thrown on federal buildings, a police car was burned, the Bay Bridge in San Francisco was taken over and fights broke out. A proud day for democracy it was not.

Protesters might try to defend their actions by claiming that they are part of this country's proud tradition of civil disobedience. Did not Thoreau protest the Mexican-American war by refusing to pay taxes?

Civil disobedience seeks to nullify a law or policy which commits some injustice to the people who are under that law. It is based on the principle that, as Augustine said, "an unjust law seems to be no law at all."

One hundred and fifty years ago Henry David Thoreau asserted that the same principle allowed him to refuse to pay his taxes. The Mexican-American war, according to Thoreau, was a war of expansion, of stealing land from the sovereign state of Mexico. He considered participation in such an action immoral and refused to participate in such an action by withholding his taxes. During the Vietnam War, draft dodgers made much the same claim, and refused to be forced to fight in an unjust and undeclared war.

Is there an unjust law which the current protesters trying to abolish? NO. Has there been anyone drafted into a war they find morally repugnant? NO. Has the President not met Constitutional requirements by not getting the authorization of Congress? Once again, no. Are they trying to claim that any declaration of war is unjust? What kind of civil disobedience is this?

The answer, of course, is that this is not, in any way, a case of civil disobedience. This is a case of a minority of Americans (around 20 percent) who have not been able to win support for their position democratically and are now trying to impose their will in the majority by taking to the streets. Convinced of their own infinite wisdom and "higher moral principles," the protesters have set out to end American involvement any way they can, and the law (the will by the majority) can go to hell for all they care. These, of course, are many of the same people who currently chastise Operation Rescue and would like to see Oliver North rot in jail for treating the law in the same way. So much for the left's ballyhooed love of the law.

This is simply a public policy question in which the opinion of the minority is different than the opinion of the majority; the rights of the minority have not been in any way violated. The principle that many of the protesters are acting under is not one of majority rule, minority rights, i.e. democracy, but one of tyranny. One would think that our recent experience with would-be tyrants like Oliver North would sober the left's desire to act as a ruling minority. Unfortunately, it has not. We can only hope that eventually both the far left and far right remember that democracy is only possible when the rule of law is respected. For where the law ends, tyranny begins.

that protect individual rights.

However the ever-present threat against our property by common thieves is not nearly as ominous as the threat posed by the ones who are supposed to protect these rights. In a grown up version of Billy's story, suppose Billy is a successful architect. Billy supports his family and makes good money. He decides to buy a new Ford truck and pays cash for it. He leaves the dealership and it is his right? Well, every year Billy is required to tell a government body what his worth is and is assessed a tax according to what he owns. He must pay every year or his truck will be seized. Wait a minute, that sounds like rent to me, so who owns the truck? Believe it or not, the government owns his truck, your vehicle, your house and everything else for which you are required to pay property taxes. The notion of state ownership of all property goes against everything this nation was founded on and the Constitution protects, and it is amazingly consistent with the Communist Manifesto, which has been proven inaccurate by the collapse of the Soviet economy. There are legal and moral ways to procure funds for the operation of government, but this is not one of them.

Those who would regulate every fact of our lives and strip us bare of all our liberties will refute this argument and claim that it is essential to the education and local government that we enjoy. But an immoral act cannot be justified by a moral cause. We must stop the rape of the citizenry in our lives and reclaim the rights bestowed to us by our creator and guaranteed by the Constitution.

Don't read his lips - watch his hands ...

To the Editors:

We are disgusted and shocked at the blithe cynicism and patent dishonesty evident in President Bush's open letter to universities, printed in the Jan. 14 issue of Technician. Make no mistake — this war will not be waged on behalf of any high moral purpose, rather to preserve the Old World Order, in which U.S. monied interests dominate and control the resources of much of the entire globe for the benefit of the privileged few.

If, as Bush maintains, the United States opposes naked aggression, why does it continue to fund the murderous government of El Salvador? Why did it carry out the filthy Contra war against the people of Nicaragua? Why did it invade the countries of Panama and Grenada? Why did it sponsor bloody coups in Chile, Brazil, and Guatemala? Why did it try to overthrow the constitutional government of Iran, installing in its place the Shah's murderous regime? Why has it been so slow to anger at the grotesque violence routinely meted out to blacks by the government in South Africa? Why does it not demand that Israel accept United Nations Resolutions 242 and 338 calling for its retreat from the occupied territories and why did the United States support Israel's brutal 1982 invasion of Lebanon, which resulted in 20,000 fatalities and hundreds of thousands of refugees? Finally, why did it ignore decades of Amnesty International reports documenting all the atrocities that resulted from U.S. interference in the affairs of other nations, only to discover their voice when they condemn Iraq? Don't read Bush's lips — watch what he does with his hands.

Technician Campus Forum

Saddam Hussein's actions in the gulf are certainly immoral and must be sanctioned. But if we are to achieve a genuine peace that rests on principle, the sanctions must be non-military and multi-lateral. Bush, on the contrary, has done everything in his power to preclude a peaceful diplomatic resolution to the crisis, pushing us instead into a violent unilateral confrontation. His efforts at "negotiation" have consisted in a series of insults and threats, designed to be rejected so as to give the appearance of necessity to what will be in fact tens of thousands of needless deaths.

The fact is that current U.S. foreign policy is a far greater threat to world peace and security than anything that Hussein can do or has done. If we wish to oppose aggression, let us clean our own house first. War in the gulf will only serve to legitimize violence and to confirm our role as global bully. It will cost us dearly, and will cost the people of the gulf even more. We must oppose this wanton show of force with every ounce of strength we possess. We have a solemn duty to every person whose life is threatened by this conflict to stop this war from happening.

Wolfpack runs past Blue Devils

Seniors finish undefeated at home against Duke

By Joe Johnson
Assistant Sports Editor

After camping out for three days during the holiday weekend, Wolfpack fans were treated to what head coach Les Robinson considers the best performance his team has had all year.

The Pack, coming off an exciting win over Marquette earlier in the week, entered Wednesday's game against the Duke Blue Devils with renewed emotion. N.C. State outlasted the Blue Devils 95-89 to pick up its 10th win of the season and the third in the ACC.

Rodney Monroe, State's all-around guard, lead State with 35 points on 13 of 19 shooting. "If I hit a couple of shots I'll take every one that's open," Monroe said.

"Rodney hit some gut-wrenching three's," Duke coach Mike Krzyzewski said. "Just when we'd get something going he'd come down and hit a three. Being extraordinary is normal for him. It was hard for us to stop him for any length of time."

As a team the Pack also shot extremely well, finishing the game at 63.6 percent. Along with the great shooting percentage, State also had balanced scoring with all five starters hitting double figures.

"I don't know that we can play any better basketball than we did tonight," Robinson said. "We were on offense a lot tonight and we changed our offensive sets effectively."

Thompson

"We wanted to win this one for the fans because they camped out for three cold nights. I couldn't have done it."

Bryant Figgins

"State can score from every position on the floor," Krzyzewski said. "They are a very confident team and it all starts with Chris (Corchiani)."

State's pit bull point guard Chris Corchiani played his normal high-intensity brand of basketball collecting 14 assists and five steals to go along with his 11 points. "We really take pride in playing in Reynolds," Corchiani said. "We used our athletic ability to take it to Duke tonight."

Another key to State's victory was the excellent play of the Pack frontcourt. Sophomore Bryant Figgins pumped in 17 points while his counterpart Kevin Thompson added 16 points and five blocked shots.

Kevin has shown flashes of brilliance in practice," Robinson said. "He's beginning to show that he's coming to play, particularly against Marquette."

Junior forward Tom Gugliotta, hampered by foul trouble through most of the game, still managed to contribute 14 points on the inside.

"It was really a physical game," Gugliotta said. "It gives us a big lift when Kevin is active scoring, rebounding and blocking shots. It is a key for this team."

"We've been cold for the last couple of games," Figgins said. "But tonight we came out strong. We wanted to win this one for the fans because they camped out for three cold nights. I couldn't have done it."

Duke was led by Christian Laettner who posted 23 points. Next on Duke's scoring list was point guard Bobby Hurley, who had 18 points on six three-pointers, and Bill McCaffrey who had 17 points. Hurley also had 10 assists to go along with his point total.

Mapping out the Heels

State's Rhonda Mapp battles for a rebound with UNC's Tonya Sampson. Mapp, who had 22 points, joined with Andrea Stinson to lead the Pack to a 10-point victory, 79-69, over UNC. Stinson tossed in 30 points on 15 of 24 shooting to lead the Pack in scoring.

Pack drops match

By Thomas Baker
Staff Writer

The N.C. State wrestling team lost a close match to arch-rival UNC-Chapel Hill Thursday, night 18-16.

"It was a very close match," said Coach Bob Guzzo. "But basically it was what we expected. Both teams wrestled very hard. No one wants to lose, but we got a good effort from everybody."

It was a tough loss for the Pack, the defending ACC champs. State and Carolina have been the dominant teams in the ACC for the past 12 years.

The Pack got its first win of the night in the 126-pound match as sophomore Clayton Grice defeated Ty Moore 8-4. State's Mark Mangrum won the 134-pound bout 4-1 over Seth Richards, and Tom Best defeated UNC's Carman Cutullo 13-6 in the 142-pound match.

The Tar Heels responded by winning four of the next five matches. The 177-pound match between State's Steve Williams and Jay Landolfo ended in a 1-1 draw.

One bright spot for the Pack was the performance of nationally third-ranked Sylvester Terkay in the heavyweight match. Terkay ran his career record to 32-10 by crushing Carolina's Michael Ballard 18-1.

The Pack falls to 7-5-0 overall, 1-1 in the ACC. Carolina improves to 8-5-0 and 1-0.

The Pack saw heavy action last weekend with a two-match road trip. They lost a close match to national power Penn State, but rebounded by picking up a key ACC win against Maryland.

Next up for the Pack is Virginia in Charlottesville on Saturday.

Wolfpack coach, players warm tent city with visit to campsites

Students waiting in line Monday night to pick up tickets to Wednesday's game against Duke got a pleasant and tasty surprise when Wolfpack head basketball coach Les Robinson came out to mingle with the crowd and buy pizza for everyone.

Robinson first noticed the 60 or 70 tents across the street from the coliseum when he came to work for practice Sunday afternoon and realized that a huge throng was braving the coldest stretch of weather yet this year just to buy tickets for State's game with the Blue Devils. Robinson was touched by that, and he decided to show his appreciation after the Wolfpack dispatched with Marquette.

With the Domino's Pizza truck still in front of the coliseum, Robinson ordered a large pizza for each tent and paid out of his own pocket. Then, Robinson and several of his players went out and told several hundred students waiting in line how much he appreciated what they were doing and that dinner was on him.

After that, he went to each tent and talked with the students, had his picture taken with several and in general made about as many friends as you can squeeze into 70 tents.

Duke coach Mike Krzyzewski has made some news over the years for going out to talking with the students who camp out for tickets to Duke's games, and the mini-city of tents that springs up outside Cameron Indoor Stadium has become well-known as Krzyzewski's Well, may the area outside Reynolds now be known as Lesboro. And the mayor of Lesboro, as its residents found out the other night, is a class act all the way.

The college baseball season is less than three weeks away, and one columnist's pre-season prediction of the ACC race has Georgia Tech finishing first, ahead of, in order, N.C. State, North Carolina, Wake Forest, Clemson, Duke, Virginia, and Maryland. More predictions in a week.

Picking Georgia Tech is easy and dangerous. The Yellow Jackets won 23 of their first 24 games last year and were ranked no. 1 in both polls. From that point on, they played below .500 the rest of the season. No team in college baseball has as many quality arms on its pitching staff, yet few teams have fewer quality pitchers.

Tech has the memory of last year's classic underachievement to deal with, and that can be a big plus or minus. No one has more talent than the Jackets, but that was true a year ago, too.

State has a host of veterans coming back, and the hitting and defense should be strong. How well State pitches may determine if the Wolfpack takes that next big step, which would be to challenge for a regional championship. Replacing Brian Bark's contributions as a pitcher will be a major key.

Bark got a ton of big hits for State over the years, but the Wolfpack has plenty of proven hitters back. He also chased down a lot of line drives hit into the outfield gaps, but several capable outfielders are on hand to fill his position. As a pitcher, Bark started and relieved and was excellent at both. Replacing his arm, however, won't be that easy.

State's pitching could be very strong this year. Junior college workhorse Matt Donohue and freshman Shawn Senior, a USA Junior National Team member in 1989, join holdovers Craig Rapp and Michael Butler in the rotation, and saves leader Jimmy Holland will be joined by a bevy of veterans in the bullpen. But no one on this staff has accomplished what Bark did, and replacing him will be difficult.

The Tar Heels lost their double-play combination, as well as their top two starting pitchers.

Freshman Keith Grunewald, a second round draft pick by the Detroit Tigers, will move in at shortstop, but second base will be tough to fill.

As for the rotation, UNC pitching coach Mark Halvorsen has made silk purses out of a number of sows' ears the last few years. The upcoming season will present him with his greatest challenge.

Picking Wake Forest ahead of Clemson is a hunch, but the Tigers lost seven drafted pitchers from last year, not that any of them did dilly-squat while they were there.

Designated hitter Eric Macrina and first baseman Joe DeBarry are the leagues best 1-2 power hitting duo, but Wake Forest returns almost an entire cast of 300 hitters and should have much improved pitching (it couldn't be worse than it was last year) with the return of Buddy Jenkins.
