Student, Faculty Senates to meet

■ The Student Senate didn't take a position on course repeat Wednesday. But a showdown may be looming this week.

NEWS STAFF REPORT

No one had the university's course repeat without penalty policy in mind when the joint Student Senate/Faculty Senate meeting was scheduled for Wednesday.

"But it is mighty convenient," Student Senate President Chris Scott said Sunday night about the topic coming up unplanned in the meeting.

In late January, a Faculty Senate report criticized the policy that lets students replace poor grades for certain classes by retaking the course. Last Wednesday a resolution on the subject never made it out of a Student Senate committee.

Scott declined to predict how the Student Senate would have voted. But he said he didn't expect easy agreement in the joint session.

"It's going to be a slugfest," he said. "[The Faculty Senate] doesn't like course repeat as a body, but they're not unanimous on it."

Faculty Senate Chairman Charles Carlton was unavailable for comment Sunday night. The Student Senate did pass some resolutions Wednesday. One, by a 21-20 margin, supported adding black to the school colors of red and white.

The vote is purely symbolic, Scott said. It would take another vote to put it on the ballot as a referendum. And a referendum would have to be approved by two thirds of voters to go into effect.

The resolution's supporters point to merchandisers' use of black in NCSU hats and apparel. Student Wolfpack Club member John Bost, one of the idea's main supporters, said last week that the change would be practical.

"Everywhere you look, it's red, white and black, even though it's red and white in the fight song," Bost said. "You might as well put it in the books to make it official."

But Scott, who said he neither wants nor expects the idea to make it to the ballot, questioned the effect that would have on the university's athletic tradition.

"Singing 'we're the red, white and black from State' just doesn't work," he said.

Students interested in joining such debates can apply for spring elections between now and March 8. Only freshman posits and those representing smaller colleges and schools won't be up for grabs in the spring. There are nine declared candidates for student body president, Scott said. Students may also run for treasurer, Student Senate president, chief justice, the Student Media Authority and the Student Center Board of Directors.

Scott said he would advise students interested in running for office to consider what they're getting into.

"Talk to people who've done it, figure out the number of hours you'll be taking next year and the commitment you have," he said. "Some weeks, I work as many as 30 hours. On a lax week, it can be as low as 15. But there aren't many lax weeks."

But Scott said it's worth it. "It tends to hone your communication skills rather quickly," he said.

Tunnel painters cited

■ Two students say they are victims of censorship after being reprimanded for spraying graffiti.

C.D. McManus said he was only decorating the Free Expression Tunnel early Wednesday morning. But moments later Public Safety handed the first-year agriculture student a campus appearance ticket for painting anti-homosexual messages.

McManus, and three other students who were cited with him, will appear before the Judicial Board Thursday.

McManus said the officers frisked them and said they couldn't paint those kinds of messages.

But McManus said he's puzzled. "I was just drawing a picture," McManus said. "I don't think that's threatening anybody's life."

Roommate Jim Pickering was there and said they were scrawling some messages and crossing out others, such as the pink triangles, which symbolize support for the gay lifestyle.

One they wrote read "Friends don't let friends become faggots." But both men said there was nothing threatening about their paintings.

That may be the case, but officers probably showed up because there was a disturbance reported, said Paul Cousins, coordinator of student judicial programs.

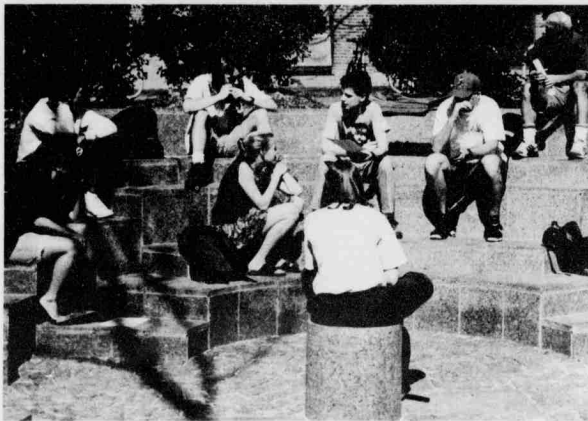

"I think that somebody called to make sure things didn't get out of hand," Cousins said. "That's part of Public Safety's role ... to make sure a discussion is conducted in a civil manner."

An argument may have erupted from a discussion about gay rights and related civil issues, Cousins said. Last week was Gay and Lesbian Awareness Week, and Cousins said there was a lot of animosity.

"Particularly in the South, tensions are high," he said. "Some may feel they were tricked by Blue Jeans Day because they didn't hear about it."

Some classes met outdoors Friday in the newly finished amphitheater at the Court of North Carolina. With warmer weather this week, students can wear shorts and T-shirts. That makes this a good time to leave the confines of class buildings.

Children set apartment fire

■ No one was hurt when three arsonists nearly destroyed an empty Gorman Street apartment unit.

With the help of neighbors, police collared three children they think are responsible for a Sunday afternoon fire at the Gorman Crossings apartments.

Some residents said they saw the culprits run away from the empty unit that was damaged by fire.

"There were three young kids, about 12 to 14," said Stephanie Monks, a graduate student in linguistics who lives at the apartment complex. "At about 12:30 p.m. it sounded like they [the kids] were tearing things up."

What they were tearing up was apartment 2205 B. Police caught the youngsters when they returned to the scene of the crime.

Just after 1 p.m., Fatima Gilarranz of 3144-B Gorman street called 911.

"My husband was cleaning out the stock room and noticed smoke," Gilarranz said.

The smoke they saw was coming from an empty apartment, said Lt. J.W. Tew of the Raleigh Police Department. There were no injuries, Tew said.

"My husband started knocking doors, getting people out while I called the fire department," Gilarranz said. "Three minutes later, fire trucks appeared."

A neighbor saw smoke and got everyone out, Monks said.

Tew said the ceiling, walls and floor of the bedroom were burned, water damage was done to the first

Sociologists link delinquency and abuse

■ NCSU sociology professors recommend education as a solution to crime by minors.

Maltreated children who have at least partly successful experiences in school are less likely to become delinquent than are maltreated children with negative school experiences, says a study done by two N.C. State University professors.

Sociology professors Jeffrey

Leiter and Matthew Zingraff have been working since 1983 on a study of the links among maltreatment, delinquency and school experience.

The professors defined maltreatment as abuse or neglect and delinquency as any type of complaint being filed in the juvenile courts.

Their studies show that 11.7 percent of maltreated children are at higher risk of delinquency to 5 percent of the general school population. Neglected children have the highest delinquency rate at 10.4 percent; physically abused children have a 9.3 percent delinquency rate. Leiter and Zingraff found that grades, absenteeism and problem behavior are the factors that most help decrease the delinquency rate.

Zingraff and Leiter studied a random sample of 3,000 Mecklenburg County children. Their research has been published in several academic journals.

The sociologists said they wanted to look at the link between maltreatment and delinquency because studies of the past showed statistics that they felt were too high. In order to get the results they wanted, they looked at the effects of maltreatment on delinquency, maltreatment on school performance and school performance on delinquency.

Leiter and Zingraff chose Mecklenburg County because they found more cooperation with the courts, the social services departments and especially the school systems.

School records are confidential, so the professors had to hire school workers to code the schools' records in order to keep them private. Mecklenburg County is North Carolina's largest and most urban county and therefore has more of the problems Leiter and Zingraff were interested in studying, they said.

The professors have presented their findings to school systems and legislative officials during conferences in Charlotte and Raleigh twice over the past three years.

To help maltreated and delinquent children, Leiter and Zingraff suggest focusing more attention on improving schools and coordinating the efforts of social service agencies, school systems and courts to address delinquency, instead of focusing on punishment.

"Finding the data was a lot of work," Leiter said. "The thing is now to use the data in a responsible way."

Choreography Showcase gives students a stage

■ A series of student dance shows has given young artists a chance to reveal their talents, says the group's director.

NEWS STAFF REPORT

At 8 p.m. Friday, the N.C. State University Dance Program will hold The Student Choreography Showcase, a display for the performing talents of seven students.

This year's showcase of talent is unlike previous ones, said Robin Taylor, director of the Dance Program at the University Student Center.

"This year is different because it will be the first time the students were able to solely choreograph their own dances," Taylor said.

Another difference was that auditions were open to the entire NCSU campus, not just Dance Program members.

Taylor said letting dancers choreograph their own works may make the performances that night even better.

"Not only will their work be of them, it will be from them," Taylor said.

She also said she believes the students need to have their own voices in their works and this showcase will allow just that.

Taylor said this concert is not just a showcase for the dancers performing. It also gives those who do not dance a chance to show off their choreography talents.

The Dance Program works closely with another NCSU dance group called Dance Vision. Dance Vision, sponsored by the Arts and Activities Program of the Student Center, encourages works that grow out of the African-American culture's experiences, Taylor said.

The dance group, formed on campus in 1978, focuses on movement and expression that correspond with many styles, including jazz.

Karyn Dumas, a senior in communication who joined the Dance Program two years ago, will perform a work she choreographed herself. Titled "The Secret," Dumas' work is about the trials of a woman who has been torn and saddened by an immoral fantasy.

Carol Finley, another NCSU dancer who graduated in December with a bachelor's degree in graphic design, will perform two emotional and flavorful pieces in the showcase, Taylor said.

"Lawn," her first work, is a satire that exchanges the familiar pacing of outdoor images for slower ones of sunbathing, golf and football. Finley will take this performance to the American College Dance Festival in Kentucky later this year, at which point judges will ask her to perform it at a national level.

Finley's second piece, "Staying to You," is a duet that reminds the audience that tender things are what matter most in life, Taylor said.

Leigh Mullen, a senior in the biological sciences, will be showing her passionate solo called "103 F," which will be performed to a song by Peggy Lee called "Fever."

In her work "Dwelling," dancer Natasha Miller, a senior in sociology of criminal justice and president of Dance Vision, will focus on the popular theme that home is where the heart is.

"Bless God," a work by Kim Stephens, is a celebratory and spiritual piece performed to a song of the same title by Carman.

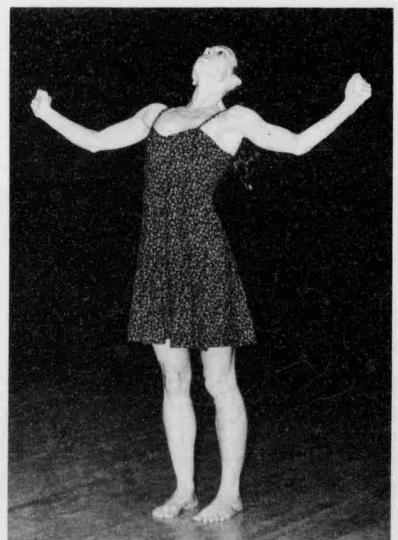

The feeling of belonging will be explored by Mair Culbreth's interpretations through movement in her soulful duet "Thirst." Culbreth is a freshman in nuclear engineering and has been dancing with the program for less than a year.

Also on the dance program for the showcase that night will be an improvisational work danced by six women under the direction of NCSU alumnae Shelly Winstead. Winstead's work is a sensual and spontaneous piece that found structure in the end, Taylor said.

Taylor said the dancers and choreographers at the Dance Program and at Dance Vision have worked hard since fall rehearsal for this concert.

"This concert is a real indication that the NCSU Dance Program is really growing," she said. "It is

Week does in State

Florida State 59
N.C. State 58

BY TED NEWMAN

N.C. State's motion-sick women's basketball team is in need of some Dramamine. This season has had more ups and downs than a roller coaster.

The Pack lost to league cellar-dweller Florida State 59-58 Sunday, capping its Hell Week or — at the very least — its Five Days of Hell. "It's hard enough to play four games in eight days," State coach Kay Yow said. "But three games on five days is tough, especially without a lot of depth — and this late in the season."

The last five days has had few bright spots for the Wolfpack. On the last play in Wednesday's loss to North Carolina, guard Nicole N.C. State's Nicole Mitchell drove past Florida State for seven points and nine rebounds Sunday.

Mitchell sprained the thumb on her shooting hand.

Then, Friday, about six hours before State's its 7 p.m. tip-off against Georgia Tech, the team found out forward Koltien Kreul, the team's second leading scorer and leading rebounder, could not play against Tech because she broke her thumb in Thursday's practice.

Kreul is expected to be out for the rest of the season, although her situation will be evaluated again later this week, according to Yow. But State found inside help from sophomore Muriel Davis, who scored nine points against the Jackets, and the Pack defeated the Jackets 71-53.

GREENSBORO — Entering the ACC Indoor Track and Field Championships, N.C. State high jumper Sean Garland was having a frustrating season, with meet results that fell short his usual performances — and even his practice performances. And he just missed his first two attempts at 6 feet, 11 3/4 inches Friday.

Then Garland sailed over the bar on his third and final try, clinching at least a third-place finish. But Garland, who trailed the two remaining jumpers, had the bar raised to 7 feet, 1 inch, nailed the jump and won the event.

"I felt like a first attempt clearance at 7-1 would win," the senior said. "I just tried to concentrate on my approach, because I know I jump better if I do that and don't worry about how high the bar is."

Garland achieved the jump, a personal best, on his first attempt try and watched teammate Omar Dixon and Florida State's Anthony Washington miss their initial attempts. Washington made good on his second try, but Garland won the ACC title on an earlier clearance. Dixon finished third. "All year (N.C. State assistant Coach (Gail) Olson has said that things looked good in practice, and we knew I could jump well if I put it all together," Garland said. "I just feel glad that it all came together at the ACC meet."

Garland's victory was the only individual title for the injury-riddled Wolfpack, which finished fifth with 66 points. Florida State pulled the upset win with 133 points, followed by five-time defending champ Clemson with 106, Georgia Tech with 94 and North Carolina with 92. Wolfpack freshman Alvis Whitted joined Garland on the all-ACC

Pack falls in first half

Duke 85
N.C. State 58

BY CLAY BEST
SENIOR STAFF WRITER

DURHAM — For N.C. State, the light at the end of the tunnel disappeared Sunday.

Less than a week after a three-game winning streak, State looked like the Wolfpack of December, failing to sixth-ranked Duke 85-58. The Blue Devils sprinted out to a 36-15 halftime lead and breezed through a meaningless second half to win convincingly.

"Duke just destroyed us in the first half," State coach Les Robinson said. "If it was a fight we would have been knocked down several times. When we got down, we got down quickly. We were just staggering out there."

Duke jumped out to a 9-2 lead on a Chris Collins' three-pointer. But State pulled within three on a Todd Fuller jumper with 15:54 left in the first. Forward Bryant Feggins had two tries to cut the Duke lead to one, but when neither shot fell, so did the Pack's hopes.

"We were playing individually in the first half and most of the game," Feggins said. "A lot of people didn't come out to play today. We weren't taking good shots."

State falls to 9-15 overall and 3-9 in the Atlantic Coast Conference, while Duke improves to 19-3 and 10-3.

The Pack failed to take good shots throughout the first half, while Duke scored on possession after possession, opening up a 23-7 lead before Mark Lewis' basket ended an eight minute, 48-second Wolfpack drought without a field goal.

State had only four field goals in the first half. The Pack's dismal 4-30, 13-percent shooting effort in the first half, combined with Duke's flawless defense led to a pitiful 15-point first half output.

"We came out to play for 40 minutes today," Duke coach Mike Krzyzewski said. "We all played very unselfishly. We must have had a lot of assists, it seemed like it. We really worked together and got good shots."

And they did. The Blue Devils dished out 17 assists, and all five starters finished in double figures. Jeff Capel led the Devils with 18 points, including a 3-3 performance from three-point range.

"We didn't allow them to make the easy passes," Krzyzewski said. "That put them in a bad position to start off their possessions. And our defense forced them to make some bad decisions."

Grant Hill and Cameron Wallace provided insight to injury with Hill's assist and Wallace's Dr. J-like Duke's Antonio Lang (21) contributed 10 points Sunday in the Devils' win over State.

Students' voice is lost

■ Student participation on university standing committees should improve.

There more than 20 standing committees at N.C. State University offer students the opportunity to have their voices heard.

Every year the student body president appoints several students to each committee. Those students help make decisions that affect university policy.

"[Students] have a hot line to the top. They know that their voices will be heard," said NCSU Health Committee chair Timothy Winslow. He also said students on his committee are active and involved. However, that is not the case for all committees.

Susan Purrington, chair of the Library Committee, said that only one of the six undergraduate students on her committee attends the scheduled meetings. She also said the committee would love to have some input from students.

Students who are appointed to committees should feel obligated to participate. The honor of serving on committees should be reserved for those who accept that responsibility.

An attendance policy for committee members would be one way to weed out those who do not take their position seriously. Student members who do not attend show no respect for the committee or its other members. They should be forced to give up their positions to students who will fulfill their duties.

One student on last year's Library Committee actually requested to be taken off the mailing list. He was appointed to the committee again this year. Perhaps the student body president should be more careful in choosing student members.

Committees offer students the chance to participate in the university's decision-making process. Students should recognize that opportunity and utilize it. Those undergraduate students who are active in committees should be commended. Those who do not take their position seriously should step down.

Commentary

Imaginary trips with our money

At some time between Aug. 13, 1993 and Aug. 25, 1993, Michael Borden, assistant director of Student Development, requested reimbursement of some travel expenses. According to a memo Borden submitted to the university, this reimbursement was for his attendance at a meeting of the Region Five National Orientation Directors Association (NODA), an event to which Borden was entitled to receive reimbursement in his capacity as orientation director.

The memo stated that the NODA Region Five summer retreat was supposed to have taken place at Marquette University in Milwaukee, Wisconsin between Aug. 8, 1993 and Aug. 11, 1993. He bought a plane ticket from US Air on July 13, 1993 presumably to travel to this conference and back. The amount of the air fare is listed on the ticket as $315.

When asked if he attended the NODA conference during the dates listed above, Borden stated, "I was in Milwaukee." I asked him again if he was at the NODA conference. Borden said, "I've already told you."

After he returned to Raleigh, Borden submitted his reimbursement request to the Office of Undergraduate Studies which, at that time, oversaw orientation-related business and funding. Whether this was done officially on the proper university forms or unofficially is not known. Many of the records surrounding this case are not available because of certain legal restrictions.

According to Becky French, legal counsel for the university, these restrictions on information release include (but are not necessarily limited to) documents in an employee's personnel file, material whose release would involve violation of a client/attorney relationship or material involving an event which is under investigation.

At 1:36 p.m. on Aug. 25, Borden sent an e-mail to Verlene Leonard in the Office of Undergraduate Studies. This e-mail read:

"Do I need anything else regarding reimbursement for my trip in August? You have the plane receipt and can figure the per diem. I have no other receipts."

Let me explain.

The "trip in August" refers to the NODA summer retreat (the heading on the memo reads "re: NODA retreat at Marquette University"). I have a copy of the plane ticket receipt previously mentioned. Per diem is a way the university figures meal allowance. The university assumes that one eats during a period of travel and reimburses the claimant a set dollar amount for meals that occur during the time of the trip. In requesting university travel reimbursement, one does not necessarily have to produce restaurant receipts to prove that one has eaten — it is assumed.

At 2:11 p.m. on Aug. 25, there was an interactive e-mail. It is headed "TO: UG Study/ Verlene [Leonard]" from "Mike Borden" and concerns "re: Lodging and Meals." The text reads as follows:

Leonard: "Did you pay for the committee?"

Borden: "The lodging was provided by the regional coordinator at Marquette University at no cost to me. All meals were paid by the individuals."

Leonard: "I need to know the time and date you left and returned."

Borden: "I left on Saturday, Aug. 7 at 7:15 a.m. and returned on Thursday, Aug. 12 at 4:15 p.m."

In further substantiation that he attended this NODA summer retreat, Borden offered the memo written on NODA home office letterhead. The memo indicates that it was sent to Pam Horne, Paul Radke, Michele McManus, Mike Borden and regional coordinators. It is from Becky Smith, president of NODA. It reads in part:

"This is to confirm our Executive Committee meeting in Milwaukee on Sunday, Aug. 8 through Wednesday, Aug. 11. We will meet in conjunction with the Region V summer retreat at Marquette University. Lodging and meals will be provided..."

I was not able to reach Smith. However, I did contact several other NODA Executive Committee members who are listed on the memo.

Pam Horne, vice president of NODA and one whose name appeared on the memo, said she never received any memo about an August conference at Marquette University. In fact, it was "not an event I'm familiar with," Horne said. This is "not a normal time of the year" to hold this type of conference. "Most regional conferences are held in the spring," she said.

I then spoke with Michele McManus, executive secretary/treasurer of NODA, whose name was also on the memo. She responded "no comment" to the particulars of the alleged NODA summer retreat but did offer the following:

When asked why she refused comment, McManus said, "We made that commitment to Michael [Borden] that all inquiries should be directed to him."

"We decided to handle this way out of professional courtesy," McManus said.

When asked if she was aware of the memo from Smith, McManus said, "Yes, I am aware of the memo and the circumstances surrounding it" though she refused comment on the memo's authenticity or whether she had actually received it.

I have been told by a source who wishes to remain anonymous that the memo is a fabrication. I was told that the memo was never sent from the home office of NODA in Georgia nor does it relate any NODA event that occurred or was planned.

I spoke with Stephanie Quade, director of the Orientation Program at Marquette University. When asked about the NODA conference that Borden is requesting reimbursement for attending, she said,

"Trust me, this conference didn't happen." Quade said she has received several other inquiries concerning this matter. She also said that she was at Marquette University during the time of the alleged summer retreat and that she would have been the regional coordinator at Marquette referred to in Borden's e-mail to Leonard.

There was no Region Five NODA summer retreat at Marquette University during August 1993, Quade said.

There was no Executive Committee meeting at Marquette University during August 1993, Quade said.

Yet Borden requested reimbursement for travel related expenses to these meetings and also presented a memo indicating that the conference was to be held as substantiation of his attendance. To my knowledge, Borden has not been reimbursed by the university for his alleged travel to Milwaukee.

This is what I was able to find out without violating any privacy statutes. It raises many questions to which I want answers. Among them are:

Do these events constitute criminal action under N.C. General Statutes?

Why is Michael Borden still employed with this university?

State dominates Kent Saturday

In a rebounding effort, N.C. State's gymnastics team defeated Kent State 189.125-184.975 Saturday night and improved to 6-3 on the season.

After last weekend's resounding win in the Hearts Invite over three top-20 teams, the Pack lacked the stunning moves that conquered 11th-ranked Missouri a week ago. "I thought we came out a little flat," State coach Mark Stevenson said. "We weren't as focused as we have been, and I didn't see the energy I would have liked to see out there."

Two of those new tricks came on State's floor exercise. Christi Newton became the first gymnast in the nation to complete a layout, full-in pike this season, receiving a 9.875 for her floor exercise. Stevenson said only one gymnast in the country successfully executed the move last season.

Wrestlers fall to Midshipmen

N.C. State's wrestling team lost its final match of the season to Navy 24-16 Saturday afternoon in Reynolds Coliseum.

Although the Pack finishes the season with a disappointing 8-7-2 mark, State coach Bob Guzzo was pleased with his team's performance against the 12-5 Midshipmen.

"We fought very well," Guzzo said. "We wrestled much better than we have all year. Our kids responded exceptionally well."

State trailed 18-16 heading into the match's final bout, and Navy's heavyweight Dan Hicks pinned Steve Hawk and put the Pack away.

Tennis team, Bolick rout 49ers

Even with a number of players out because of injuries, N.C. State's men's tennis team dominated UNC-Charlotte Sunday 5-2 at the Wolfpack Tennis Complex.

"We are still playing without some key people and some guys are playing hurt," said State coach Crawford Henry, whose team improves to 2-1. "We are delighted to get through this one with such a big win."

Senior Bert Bolick remained unbeaten, defeating UNC's Mario Alvarez 7-5, 6-4. The duo of Bolick and freshman Eric Saunders are also remained undefeated.

The five-day period ended Sunday with a loss to the Seminoles. The Pack falls to 12-12 overall and 5-9 in the ACC. FSU improves to 2-12 and 5-19.

"We were a step slow on defense all day individually and as a team," Yow said. "We could not sustain any kind of offensive attack. We were just not sharp with anything, setting or using screens, passing and catching the ball — I mean nothing."

The game remained close for the majority of the first half, but the Pack trailed the entire time. FSU's lead grew to as many as eight with two minutes remaining, leading 33-27 at halftime.

leading scorer and chief three-point threat, took no shots in the first half as she scored four points at the foul line.

The lead grew to as many as 10 in the second half before the late Wolfpack rally. Howard came to life as she hit a trio of triples in the last 10 minutes to bring the Pack back. Her last three was a half court heave at the buzzer for the game's final points.

Howard led all scorers with 16 points — four free throws in the first half and four threes in the second. She also dished out a career-high seven assists. Muriel Davis collected a double-double, making all six of her shots for 12 points. She also pulled down 11 rebounds.

"Everybody's got to do a better job, including the coaching staff," Yow said. "We've got to continue team, earning honors for his second-place finishes in the 55 and 200 meter dashes. Whitted's runner-up position in a strong 55-meter field was a mild surprise, but his finish in the 200 was actually a disappointment.

Because of the small track in the Greensboro Coliseum, the 200 meter final was run in two four-man sections. Running in the second section against the fastest preliminary qualifiers, Whitted moved to the front on the final straightaway and threw his arms up in triumph at the finish line. Then, he realized his time of 21.71 was .02 slower than the winner of the first section.

"I guess I kind of learned a lesson here, because my coach said if I had leaned at the finish instead of raising my hands I might have won," Whitted said. "But overall I'm really happy with it. I'm ready to take these guys on outdoors."

Looking forward to the outdoor season was a common theme among the State athletes. The Wolfpack's top two returning scorers, jumper/sprinter Neil Chance and distance runner Tony Riley, sat out the meet with injuries but should return for the outdoor season. State will also get a major boost from the return of NCAA triple jump champion Tyrell Taitt, a fifth-year senior who has completed his indoor track eligibility.

"Considering the people we were missing, we had a fairly good meet," State head coach Rollie Geiger said. "Sean and Aloys did an outstanding job, and I think you also have to commend Emmanuel Barnes and Shane Garcia for competing and scoring in two events."

Barnes took third in the long jump (24-3) and fourth in the triple jump (51-0). Garcia was sixth in the mile (4:17.07) and fourth in the 3000 meters (8:30.27).

The already-depleted State women's team was decimated by injuries and illness, sidelining distance runners who provide the bulk of the team's points. Sophomore Kathy Knabb provided the team's only points, finishing seventh in the 5000 meters (17:56). North Carolina won the women's meet with 152 points.

working with the offense to help them get our scorers the ball."

Friday, State trailed early in its win over Georgia Tech, but it ended the first half on a 16-4 run, sparked by consecutive threes by Howard, to take the control of the game. The Yellow Jackets trailed 28-38 at the half and were never able to cut the under four for the rest of the game.

Howard, once again, led all scorers with a career-high 21 points. Howard's free throw streak came to an end at 39, one short of her own school record.

Quicha Floyd had a solid all-around game with 12 points, 13 rebounds and six assists.

The Pack will play its final home game Wednesday, facing Wake Forest at 7 p.m. in Reynolds Coliseum. State defeated the Deacons 76-73 in overtime Jan. 18.

scoop basket under the outstretched arm of Fuller to beat the first-half buzzer.

"Duke made us play faster than we wanted to," Robinson said. "I saw them do things today they haven't done in a long time. We did not handle the pressure and the situation very well."

State scored 43 points in the second half, seemingly unphased by the demolition it experienced in the first 20 minutes.

Lakista McCuller lead State with 12 points, scoring all of its points in the second half on 5-6 shooting.

"This is the kind of loss that sends your team in one of two directions," Figgins said. "We got embarrassed today. Duke won the game in the first half. 'We can either regroup and get back to playing like we were last week. Or we can play like this and not win again this season.'"

LAPD INSPECTS RALEIGH

a theatre work unsuitable for the faint of heart

3 PERFORMANCES ONLY

Thursday, Friday & Saturday
February 24, 25 & 26 at 8:00pm
City Gallery of Contemporary Art
Moore Square Arts District, downtown Raleigh

The Los Angeles Poverty Department (LAPD), a professional theatre company based in Skid Row in LA, is spending six weeks in Raleigh working with members of our community who are homeless to develop a full-length performance piece based upon their life experiences.

Comprised of homeless and formerly homeless persons, LAPD gets into the streets and lives of citizens who are homeless, and turns their reality into an evening of performance — an evening of life, straight from the mouths of those who are living it. This is theatre as interaction — a rich pairing of everyday life, as it is lived, and the arts.

The LAPD residency is made possible in part by a grant from the Lila Wallace-Reader's Digest Arts Partners Program which is administered by the Association of Performing Arts Presenters, by a grant from the National Endowment for the Arts through the Southern Arts Federation, of which the North Carolina Arts Council is a member, and by a grant from the North Carolina Arts Council, a state agency. This residency is co-sponsored by The Independent Weekly, Widow's Son Lodge #4, Escalier Lodge #21, Meredith Guest House, and the City of Raleigh Parks & Recreation Department.
