Alcohol a stadium concern

Here are a few helpful hints for fans going to Carter-Finley Saturday night.

BY DOLLY SICKLES

As the 24th-ranked N.C. State Wolfpack gears up for the rest of the football season, students and fans should be aware of school policies and state laws that apply to fall's biggest sport. And the biggest problem is liquor. Paul Cousins, coordinator of judicial programs, said NCSU is responsible for enforcing the North Carolina. Wake County and NCSU laws that deal with alcohol. The state policy says one must be 21 to purchase, possess and consume any alcoholic beverage-Wake County has an ordinance prohibiting.

Wake County has an ordinance prohibiting alcohol in an open container. Campus policy allows alcohol consumption only in residence halls and fraternity houses and during laigating and specially sponsored events designated by the chancellor. Beer and table wine are the only alcoholic beverages permitted in the Carter-Finley parking lot, and only for those older than 21. Absolutely no alcohol of any kind is permitted inside the stadium. As a rule, there are few problems with the alcohol policies. The majority of problems, though, occur within the student section of Carter-Finley. Most of those involve underage consumption. Cousins said. "Students who are caught drinking underage — assuming they are cooperative with the police or security officer — will get a campus appearance ticket first," he student to evither pay a fine or appear at the Wake County courthouse. Meredith College poet's work 'prickly' Both men were friends of hers, which made it appropriate for her to open the series. The first poem Adcock read was "Plath," addressed to Sylvia Plath's mother. It spoke of sadness, loss and death and left you wondering if Plath was a person you wanted to meet. "Maybe I understand it better since I have encompassed so much of it," Adcock said. Adcock said she works better around two in the morning. In contrast to organized writers who write every day, she writes in what she referred to as "scraps and scribbles."

In addition to the free ticket, students can purchase one ticket at regular price per AllCampus Card. One student can get up to a maximum of 12 tickets.

On game day, trying to find a parking spot at the stadium is hard, especially during conference games. The stadium lot fills up quickly, creating headaches for those unfamiliar with Raleigh.

The site for the new Entertainment and Sports Arena has taken a chunk of the stadium's parking.

Crime Prevention Officer Larry Ellis said there are other parking lots nearby.

"You can park at Carter-Finley, of course, but there are also alternative parking places," he said. "At the fairgrounds, there's a lot of spaces, but you have to walk a ways."

Several people who don't park in the stadium end up parking along Blue Ridge Road, Trinity Road and the empty lots at the N.C. State Fairgrounds.

Security suggests students should arrive as early as possible for the games instead of waiting until right before kickoff. This will help them to avoid the crowds that push and shove to get in at the last minute.

The parking gates open three hours before game time, and entrance gates to the stadium open 90 minutes before kickoff.

N.C. State's volleyball match against Coastal Carolina looked like a practice match for the first two sets. The Wolfpack felt that way too, with Duke and North Carolina coming up this weekend. But after dropping the third set, head coach Kim Hall reminded N.C. Store Hall creations the Wolfpack that practices run in the afternoon, not the evening. the ground after the big win we had down in Clemson. And get our mind and thoughts focused toward the next four weeks and starting with Western Carolina. Western Carolina's a very fine football team, it's a football team that — if we don't go out and play very well — then they're very capable of beating us. I think they proved that with the way they played against Georgia Tech. They had about 500 yards offense against Georgia Tech and Georgia Tech's defense a week before played well against Arizona. We've got our hands full but we've got to go out and take care of business and play they way we're capable of playing.

How does Eddie Goines come up with the big play all the time? Does he just have a special sense for it?

I don't think it's a sense, I just think Eddie wants the big play. He wants to be the big-play person. He has confidence in himself. If it's the last play of the game or fourth-and-ten, if it's your last chance he wants to be involved, he wants the football coming to him. He's like the gay that doesn't mind taking the three-point shot in basketball when the clock's running down. He has that confidence about him. He believes that he can make the big play and that's what makes Eddie a fine receiver. The other receivers in "We'd better be focused and we'd better be ready," O'Cain said. "Or we'll get our rear ends kicked." That's it. I thought. That's what he's all about. Real coaches would have said asses. Or butts, maybe. But not rear ends.

But not rear ends. They would have snarled at such a question and told you their team was damn ready. I had thought that in the world of football, motivation is directly proportional to intimidation. We don't know how he ended up down there. Mickey seemed so...intelligent. Maybe he's reading that buffoon's "Fearless Forecast" that runs every week in the News & Observer. What's that gay's name again? Speaking of buffoons, how can you take anyone from MAD magazine seriously? Frank Jacobs, who spent hours on end analyzing lines, algorithms and two-deep charts, is already five games back. His new method is bindfold himself, tack the picks to wall, and throw darts for his weekly selections. He was about to select Western Carolina this week until he realized he accidentally hin his car, not the Catamiounts. It's a miracle his partner in Catamounds. It's a miracle his partner in slime, Nick Meglin, is not in last place. He says, "I find that when I pick the winners the day after the game, I do better. For instance, I0-5 betrer, 13-2 after!" Nick, everyone here is 15-0 after the games have been played. No wonder you're just a game out of last.

Ted Newman is so bad a 13-2 record only pulls him into a tie for fifth place. Newman keeps invoking teams like the 1951 New York Giants, the 1983 Wolfpack and the 1992 Atlanta Braves, teams that came back from long odds late in the race. Ted, tune into reality and repeat after us — Tampa Bay, Sacramento, the Hartford Whalers.... And last on our hit list is N.C. State basketball player Mark Davis. Oh, boy. Head to head

STATE ON OFFENSE WESTERN ON DEFENSE

Running: The Wolfpack ripped through a once effective Clemson defense for over 250 yards rushing two weeks ago. Taulback Brian Fitzgerald leads the Pack in rushing with 161 yards in two games and Rod Brown is ripping off nearly six yards per carry, the Catamound defense is yickling 197 yards on the ground per game. State's o-line matches up comparably with the Car's diline, but the loss of outside linebacker Elton Clawson to a knee injury and the Pack's stable of backs gives them the nod. Passing: Across the board, State's receivers are two to four inches taller than the Western defensive backs. Look for the Pack to go deep carly to test them. Edite Goines had two scores on three catches in Death Valley, so an over-compensated defense could mean career days for Adrian Hill and Mike Gather. Not to menion the Catamounts are giving up 220 yards in the air as well.

WESTERN ON OFFENSE STATE ON DEFENSE

Running: Western is no slouch when they have the ball. They average nearly 250 yards on the ground, and their line is slightly bigger than the Pack's defensive line. Tailback Mark Howell, a 5-8, 188 lb. sparkplug, leads the attack with twice as many carries as the next closest rusher. The Pack, which held Chemson to just 21 yards, leads the conference in run defense and is fourth in the nation in that category.

In that category: Passing: Junior Chad Greene runs the option effectively for Western and is able to roll up some yards in the air as well. For a team that averages 32 points a game, only three scores have been touchdown passes. The Pack secondary completely shut down the Clemson passing attack and has allowed only one touchdown. Ricky. Bell and William Strong can cover just about anybody in the country, and James Walker pulled in his first interception last week.

SPECIAL TEAMS

Steve Videtich leads the Wolfpack in scoring and has connected on 11 straight field goals (a school record). Western is without the mercural Kerry Hayes, their all-American kick returner. He is out with figament damage in his knee. The Cats' putter averages five more yards per kick than State's, and they may need those extra yards with Eddie Goines returning punts.

COACHING

Western's Steve Hodgin is in his fifth year at Cullowhee as opposed to Mike O'Cain's two in Raleigh, But there is a difference between Division I-AA and I-A. And despite recent sareas from Marshall, that difference is not small. Hodgin has turned around a struggling program whereas O'Cain stepped into a successful one. But, Hodgin played at UNC.

INTANGIBLES

Western hasn't beaten the Pack in three tries. In Western hasn I beaten the Pack in three trees. In fact, they have never scored more than 18 points in Carter-Finley. It will be Youth Day and all those screaming teenagers rolling down the hill should spur the Wolfpack on to victory. The Pack will "take care of business" one more time.

felt like I had failed." Through hometown friend Beth Polson, who heads her own production company in Hollywood, Ward got a job working on John Tesh's NBC show 'One to One." "I was scared." Ward said about his move to L.A. "It was 3,000 miles away. Growing up in a small town, I thought Raleigh was big. But I was shocked when I reached Los Angeles."

At Tesh's show, Ward went on interview shoots, was responsible for three-camera set-ups and getting the crew lunch.

Ward said that Tesh, who attended N.C. State but did not earn a degree, was "an odd guy, and bitter about N.C. State." He said his connection to N.C. State had "no bearing on his getting a job there."

After "The Front Page," Ward did some freelance work for various people, including Pat O'Brien, a sports anchor for CBS Sports.

O'Brien wrote a letter of recommendation for Ward when Ward applied for the job at Fox Sports.

At Fox's football show. Ward works 12 to 15 hours a day, six or seven days a week from June until the NFC Championship game Jan. 22.

When most people take it easy on the weekends, Ward does most of his work. He reports in by 9:00 Saturday morning and doesn't leave until 5:00 p.m. on Sunday.

Working out of the studio, Ward handles graphics concerning the game score and game stats for the current game and previous games played by the featured teams.

After the NFL season ends, Ward may be transferred to Fox's recently acquired NHL coverage. He would still be doing graphics for the NHL telecasts.

Ward says he misses N.C. State and the people here.

"I think about N.C. State mostly in the winter," Ward said. "I think about where I would be if I was still on campus, if I would be camping out for basketball tickets."

things combined are going to cause some young men over the course of their to be ineligible that two or three or four years ago would have been eligible. That coupled with 85 scholarships, yes, you're going to see more freshmen having to play.

Ward was also a member of Lambda Pi Eta, a Communication honors fraternity, and served as an intern for the Agriculture Communication department. The summer hefore his senior year, he interned at WAVY-FV, a MBC affiliate in Norfolk, Va. "That is where I picked up most of my experience in television," Ward said. Tribes dance at museum

Technician

The Museum of History recently offered a taste of Native American dance and music.

By AMITY HIGGINBOTHAM

The darkened auditorium vibrated to the beat of a drum. The dancers, tuned to its rhythm and pattern, were fanciful birds who stomped and floated over the stage in a blur of red, blue and yellow. Singers and dancers of the United Tribes of North Carolina visited the N. C. Museum of History Sunday to teach others something about their culture through traditional entertainment. Their performance was part of the museum's Music of North Carolina series featuring a different performance on the second Sunday of each moth.

featuring a different performance on the second Sunday of each month. Wanda Whitman Penner, member of the Eno-Occaneechi tribe, started with the women's traditional dance. Her steps were light and her movements soft. "Women were honored because we were the givers of life and when we dance in the traditional way, it's a graceful dance," Penner said. "Every time we make a step, it's a step of prayer." "Fringes lined the sleeves of Penner's suede dress and flowed like waves of grass with each movement. She danced in a circle, a representation of the cycle of life. "We honor the earth, and life itself, by the circle," she said.

While Penner danced, Tony Little Turtle Clark played

Assent er creme Lonco The North Carolina Theatre kicked off its 10th anniversary season with an incredible production of Tim Rice's "Chess." "Chess" is a grand-scale musical depicting the competition between the Soviet chess "champion of the world." Anatoly, and the American challenger, Freddie. The chess rivalry seems to be based on the Bobby Fischer and Boris Spassky chess competition in 1972. But don't go into this musical thinking it's just about chess. The game is only a minor part of the plot.

pame is only a minor part of the plot. "The Lion King," utilizes the "kitchen-sink" style of musical making: "Chess" throws in an international chess rivatry, a love story, a missing father tom from his daughter by a revolution, a political defection and the '80s favorite enemy, the KGB. And it's the excess that makes "Chess" great. It doesn't take itself toor seriously by laying a heavy moral lesson on the audience. Think of it as "Les Miserables"-lite.

I was attacked Wednesday night — in Carmichael Gym. This is how it happened: I was waking down a hall, and all of a sudden this huge man jumped out from behind a corner. He grabbed me. I felt his weight hulking down on me and his hands digging into my arms and his chin pressed into my shoulder. It all happened so fast. My thoughts were racing, and my heart was pounding.

It ali happened so fast. My thoughts were racing, and my heart was pounding. But I didn t panic. I yelled — "NO"— from my gut, and I scraped his shin and stomped on his foot. "LEAVE ME ALONE" I yelled, and I stammed my elbow into his ribcage. He backed off, and I ran like hell. Fortunately, this was only a test. But i if it had been an actual emergency. I'd like to think I would have been able to handle it was as well. The techniques I used to get away are called the "stun and run" method of self-defense. I learned them in a workshop faught by Connie bomino of student Health Services and Larry Ellis of Public Safety. It was Ellis who attacket me. It's not in the news like the other two, guns and smoking. But it's happening. And the logic behind it is flawed. Most everyone will agree that free speech is a trademark of the United States. A new wave of tolerance and liberation of ideas and views has reinforced the importance of tolerance and liberation of the shuld be put on free speech. received a campus citation for painting anti-gay slogans in the tunnel after members of the LGSU covered the tunnel with the names of famous gay persons and notices of the week's events. The writings of McManus and his friends were branded as "hate speech" and prompted students to gather and express their support for turning the university into a "hate-free zone." Hate speech is any speech or expression that includes intentional insults or derogatory statements of a hostile. The First Amendment of the U.S. Constitution guarantes each citizen the Constitution guarantees each citizen the right to free speech. The Constitution does Higgenbotham ot specify what type of speech is free. It does not prohibil hat speech. Hat speech is a right, not a crime. Therefore, hat speakers should not be punished. Let's look at this a little more closely. An insuft, or an attack on one's character, values or belief system, does not only come in the form that speech. Friendly speech, or expression that does not intend to insult, often does so inadvertently. The message painted by LGSU members insulted the religion of students who believe that homosexuality is a sin. Their speech insulted students, therefore placing it under the same definition as hate speech. However, their freedom to speak was not disputed. As soon as the government begins classifying free speech into acceptable and macceptable categories, the First Amendment will begin to fall apart. If they re allowed to take an inc, they'll take a mile. Before long, the freedoms on which this nation was founded will slowly ende. Granted, those opposed to hate speech which this nation was founded with stowy erode. Granted, those opposed to hate speech believe it to be a cause of hate terrine. Verbal arguments between two individuals usually include insufts, or hate words, But rarely do such verbal confrontations lead to physical encounters. And when physical attacks do occur, they are usually by-products of many conflicts, as opposed to one.

instances hate crime and hate speech have gone hand in hand. Take, for instance, Adolf Hitler's mass extermination of the Jews in Cernmany during World War II. The Nazis preached hate and practiced murder. In this case, speech does give a false appearance of causing the Holocaust. The actual causes, however, consist of a complex combination of social, economic and political variables. Hate speech was a product of those variables, as were the hate crimes. Along with the charge of causing hate crime, hate speech is accused of stepping on the rights of others. Speech was he defined as an action. Under that definition, hate speech's tendency to offend others.

on the rights of others. Speech can be defined as an action. Under that definition, hate speech's tendency to offend others can be likened to causing part on or njury. In such a case, hate speech should be limited to prevent its abridgment of the rights of those who are hurt by the speech. However, that definition is merely an interpretation. The First Amendment does not define speech as an action that descress restriction. Instead, it grants everyone an equal right to free speech — a right without restrictions. Those opposed to hate speech have the right to respond in any non-violent way they choose. But the Constitution does not grant the right to limit offensive free speech. As extensions of the state, college campuses should act as open forums for

As extensions of the state, college campuses should act as open forums for the debate of all ideas and issues. The University environment should encourage and actively promote such free expression protected by the First Amendment. Censorship does not fit into the picture. Crime, not free speech, is a threat to college students. Hate crime deserves punishment. Hate speech is not a crime. But once they han smoking, outlaw guns and put those little cameras inside your head, hate speech won't even be an issue.

You might argue that the past proves otherwise. It is true that in several historic Humanism needs classification

One of the most remarkable phenomena of recent times has been the resurgence of humanism in various ideological circles. Never before has interest in humanism been so widespread — and rarely has the humanist philosophy been so poorly understood by both supporters and opponents.

We should base our understanding of the world on what we can perceive with our senses and comprehend with our minds. Therefore, in matters of belief we find reason, when applied to the evidence of our senses and our accumulated knowledge, is our most reliable guide to understanding the world and making our choices.

understanding the world and making our choices. Humanists do not ignore those ideas arrived at through religious experience, altered states of consciousness or emotions. But testing these ideas against reality is the only way to determine their validity as knowledge. What is true for our scientific conclusions is even more true for our moral choices and social policies. Efforts to base philosophies on superhuman sources results in errors when these illusions become the basis for decisions concerning social policies. The here and now physical world of our senses is the one relevant for our ethical concerns. Therefore, humanists maintain that human values only make sense in the context of human life. A supposed different existence after death should not be included as part of the environment in which our values must operate. Humanists tend to base their ethical decisions and ideals upon human needs and concerns as opposed to the needs and concerns of deities. We should measure the value of a choice by how it affects human life, not by religions which for the most part are based upon supernatural mysticism. The only ideas which can be called knowledge are those which are firmly grounded in the realm of human understanding and verification. There is no compelling evidence at this time to justify the belief that the human mind is distinct and separable from the human body. All we know about the personality suggests every part of it is subject to change caused by physical dusaes, injury and death. Therefore, there are usufficient grounds for belief in a soul.

accumatector ground for certer in a soul. Human beings are neither entirely unique from other forms of life nor the final product of some planned scheme of development. Evidence shows humans an made from the same building blocks as other life forms and are subject to the same natural pressures. Humans are the latest result of a long series of natural evolutionary change, but not the only result or the final one. Continuous change can be expected to affect ourselves and other life forms. There appears to be no ultimate beginning or end to this process. The basic motivation which determines

TOMATO PASTA SALAD

When you cook spaghetti, do you ever run out of sauce and have left-over pasta? Instead of tossing it, you can use your remaining noodles in a salad. Or, you can start with fresh pasta - any size or shape will do.

- Pour some diced canned tomatoes over the noodles. You will have to judge how much you need, depending on how much pasta you have.
- Add about 1/2 cup of vinegar. Balsamic is preferred, though any
- type will do. Add some garlic salt, pepper, basil, oregano and/or rosemary (fresh or dried) if you
- have it. • Mix it all together.
- · Enjoy.
