A man who has lived their dream

■ Drama students gathered to have breakfast with Henry Winkler.

By JEANETTE MICHAELSON
Staff Writer

The conference room was buzzing in anticipation of Henry Winkler's visit.

N.C. State drama students nibbled on the breakfast buffet and joked about what they were going to ask him. "I'll ask him for a job," one said.

Then, right on time, Winkler made his entrance.

He went around the room, smiling, shaking hands and getting everyone's name. He finally came to rest at the end of the conference table.

His talk was supposed to be on acting and producing, but mostly it was about what it takes to succeed in a very competitive business.

"You have to want this in the very core of who you are," Winkler told the 20 or so students. "It's so difficult. I never let go of what I wanted. I never let go of my dream."

Winkler asked if any of the drama students intended to become professionals. Most said they do.

Maybe the most important thing Winkler told the class — at least in his view — was to learn how to trust your instincts.

"What you know in your head is very small. What you know in your stomach is enormous."

The Fonz speaks

■ Henry Winkler got students laughing at the Honors Convocation — then he talked about the problems facing America and its youth.

By CHRIS BYSDEN
Assistant News Editor

An actor best known for his role as a high school dropout received a standing ovation from a room full of academics after he delivered the keynote address at N.C. State's Ninth Annual Honors Convocation.

The convocation area set aside in Reynolds Coliseum was packed Wednesday morning, as the university recognized faculty and students who have achieved academic honors.

Henry Winkler, who played Fonzie on "Happy Days" from 1974-84 and went on to produce "MacGyver," told the crowd the importance of high self-esteem.

Winkler's sense of humor kept the audience laughing, both before and during his speech. He made playful gestures at his old friend, chemical engineering professor Carol Hall, while she was introducing him.

The laughs continued when Winkler had trouble getting his notes out of his pocket. "I think my gown has eaten my speech," he said.

But Winkler had a serious side, and message, to his speech. He said problems such as violence have destroyed America's sense of community.

"We have to take our country back," he said. "We have to be able to solve misunderstandings with words. That's a lost art."

Winkler said the country's youth will have to be the ones who fix America's problems. "The flowers of tomorrow are in the seeds of today," he said. "You [students] are the seeds — the world is yours."

But America's children are also part of the problem.

"They have no sense of future, they can't see past their nose," Winkler said.

He said the problem comes from a lack of respect for children, and for ourselves.

Discount cards distributed

■ New student discount cards will save students some money.

By EDITH THORNTON
Staff Writer

Student Body President Bobby Johnson, Jr. hopes to put a little extra change in students' pockets. Johnson said he and his friend, Scott Cohen, now Johnson's chief of staff regarding academic life on campus, discussed student discount cards last year before Johnson was elected. Now the cards are a finished project.

"The discount cards are a way to relieve the financial burden students have," Johnson said. "I am a student and I understand how hard it is to make your money last. I felt that if my position could make students' lives a little easier, then it was worth the time commitment. Most of the discounts don't seem like much, but over the course of the year it really adds up."

In the past three weeks, 15,000 discount cards were distributed to D.H. Hill Library, the University Student Center, the Student Center Annex and to resident advisers to pass on to students. College department heads were given cards to give to faculty members.

The "Student Savings Card" features 26 businesses offering discounts, such as McDonald's, Dairy Queen and Wendy's. Students and faculty can also receive savings at The Cutting Edge, All Tune and Lube and Pack Backers. The discounts expire next September.

Johnson said the publishing company, University Press, contacted the businesses and printed the cards at no charge to Student Government.

Sean Bullock, chief of staff regarding student life, worked with Johnson to distribute the cards.

"If someone still needs a card they are available at the Student Center and the Student Center Annex. All you have to do is ask for a 'Student Savings Card,'" Bullock said.

James McNeil and Tanya Jones, two of Johnson's executive assistants, helped Bullock distribute the cards.

I think I'll be dead today

Student Health Services arranged for some students to pretend they were dead for a day on Wednesday. Participating students dressed in black, wore signs and could not talk.

Avent Ferry Complex troubles continue

■ A smoking air-conditioner triggers a fire alarm at Avent Ferry Complex.

By JENNIFER SORBER
Staff Writer

The fall semester is more than halfway through, and the Avent Ferry Complex is still having problems.

Wednesday night around 7:10 p.m., Avent Ferry residents in the "E" building were disturbed by a fire alarm.

"Lint on the coils of the [air-conditioning] filter started burning and caused smoke" in room 157, said Lynn Johnson, district chief at the Raleigh Fire Department.

"I turned the heat on and there was cold air blowing out so I turned it off," said Kathryn Denton, who lives in room 157. "I went back to studying and about 10 minutes later the alarm went off."

Denton's roommate, Sharon Lee, wasn't in the room at the time.

"I was coming back to the building and the fire alarm started," Lee said. "I went to get my roommate, and when she opened the door she was standing in a haze of smoke."

Public Safety's Larry Ellis said the incident "was a slight fire, if you even want to call it that. This is not the same problem as before, it's entirely different."

New code would apply to more off-campus behavior

■ A proposed change to the Student Code of Conduct may give the university more control over students' off-campus activities.

By RON BATCHO
News Editor

N.C. State students may soon be more accountable to the university for their off-campus actions.

NCSU's coordinator of judicial programs, Paul Cousins, told the Student Senate Wednesday that the Code of Conduct could undergo major revisions for the first time since 1990.

Cousins was on the committee that proposed the changes, along with Kanton Reynolds, student body chief justice; Tom Stafford,

"This is about our rights. In the Constitution, it's called double jeopardy. But at N.C. State, it's OK."

—Megan Jones,
Student Senate president

vice-chancellor for Student Affairs; and Deb Luckadoo, Cousin's assistant. Any changes made in the code must be approved by the Board of Trustees.

One reason for the proposed changes is the annual Brent Road party, which receives much unfavorable media attention.

"We are getting hammered in the press about Brent Road because a majority of the residents in that area are N.C. State students," Cousins said.

Cousins said he wanted to present the revised code to the Board of Trustees at its Nov. 18 meeting. To do that, Cousins said the code needs to be in the Board's hands a week in advance, so he wanted to get student input as quickly as possible.

"Ten to 12 copies of the revised code will be available in the Student Government office Thursday," Cousins said. The copies can be looked at by any student. Cousins said he will pick the copies up from the Student Government office

Tuesday at 5 p.m.

Several Student Government officers encouraged the senators to look at the new code and to get other students to look at it.

"Students should voice their opinion now instead of complaining about it later," said Student Body President Bobby Johnson Jr.

Reynolds told the senate that 52 campus appearance tickets were issued at Brent Road, and that 18 of 20 CATs issued at Carter-Finley stadium this year have been issued outside of the stadium in the parking lot.

"You can be held responsible for 80 to 90 percent of your actions off campus," Reynolds said. "I don't think that's fair."

Student Senate President Megan Jones is also upset about the proposed changes to the code.

"This is about our rights," she said. "In the Constitution, it's called double jeopardy. But at N.C. State, it's OK."

Jones also encouraged students to come look at the code.

"Please come to the Student Government office," she said. "We need students to back us up."

Cousins said other proposed changes in the code include adding stalking to the harassment code and a provision that holds students accountable for actions that go against the mission of the university or don't meet the university's expectations.

The Senate also distributed $9,730.73 Wednesday, passing 12 finance bills that gave amounts from $75 to $2,380 for various conventions and activities.

"In order to be considerate to somebody else, we must be considerate to ourselves first. It is up to you to meet the incredible potential that is locked in every one of you."

Winkler said the key to success is positive thinking. He said he is very familiar with negative thinking and its consequences because of his experiences with dyslexia.

He said he didn't do well in high school, and only two of the 24 colleges he applied to accepted him. Winkler said his father wanted him to go into the family business instead of acting.

But Winkler followed his dream, and was eventually accepted into Yale drama school. But even then, the negative thoughts persisted.

"I was sure I was going to be sent home," he said. "There's no nutritional thought in negative thought."

"The habit of negative thinking is addictive. It's up to us to beat back those bad feelings. Genius is only your initiative on fire." While the academics on the dais didn't seem bowled over by Winkler's wit, several students said they appreciated Winkler's style.

"I hate speakers that are boring," said freshman Ginger Rhodes. "He was not."

"I just like the way he related to everybody," said sophomore Bryant Crisp. "He's the best [Honor's Convocation] speaker I've heard in the past three or four years."

Before Winkler took the podium, NCSU honored members of the campus community who have achieved academic success. Chancellor Larry Monteith presented students who had received prestigious national scholarships and awards with certificates of recognition.

Members of Phi Kappa Phi were also honored. Those recognized were junior and senior engineering students with 4.0 grade point averages.

Keith Harrod, chairman of the Board of Trustees, presented the Holladay Medal to three NCSU faculty members. The award, named for NCSU's first chancellor, Alexander Holladay, is the highest award made by the university in recognition of achievement by faculty members.

"This university is about academics," Harrod said. "Individually and collectively, [the Holladay Medal winners] represent the best" of NCSU.

Those receiving the award were: Clark Cockerham, professor emeritus in statistics; Barbara Parramore, professor of curriculum & instruction; and Wayne Skaggs, professor of biological & agricultural engineering.

Winkler said. "Listen to your instinct. Your instinct will tell you if you are in the right place, with the right person, doing the right thing. You instinct will tell you everything you need to know." Instinct. And attitude. He said that when you walk into an audition, or an interview, or any situation for that matter, it's attitude that makes the difference.

"With the right attitude you have power. You become a beacon of light and you light up the room."

Winkler told the drama students that once they get out of NCSU, they ought to head to graduate school.

As a grad student at Yale, Winkler did student and professional productions, as well as a traveling children's theater. In three years, Winkler did 70 plays.

"You cannot believe what training ground that is. Theater first and theater will train you to do all other things."

Winkler lit up the nation's TV screens for 11 years as Arthur Fonzairelli, the high-school dropout who lived over the Cunningham's garage. He had a short run on the Fox series "Monty" last year, but lately he has spent as much time directing and producing as acting.

The move away from acting was a step he took out of fear. "I never wanted to be in one of those books of whatever happened to."

He said it's easy to end up on Hollywood's out list, and there are plenty of industry people who will abuse their power to keep you there.

"Power is a mirage," Winkler said. "If you think you are powerful, it's the end. You let other people think you are powerful and go about your merry way."

After a few more questions, it was time for Winkler to leave for the Honors Convocation.

He stood with the drama students for a photograph and, after making sure he shook hands with everyone, turned and made his exit.

Growing up Carolina

■ The game against Carolina is more than a football game; it's a way to get revenge on the Tar Heels and forget an old way of life.

N.C. State beating North Carolina on the road in men's soccer this past weekend was a sweet prelude to the most bitter football rivalry in the state.

But it was also a reminder of where I came from. There was a kid in the front row decked out in a Carolina football jersey and cap, and he waved around a sign drawn on a piece of notebook paper. "Go Carolina," it said, in that scrawly little-kid font usually found on refrigerators. Boy, does he look familiar. I said to myself. He looked like me. 15 years younger.

I remember wearing Carolina blue sweatshirts, getting those fuzzy cheek tattoos from the Shrunken Head on Franklin Street, eating at the Porthole, writing fan mail to Al Wood, and waving around notebook-paper signs at football and basketball games.

In short, I was a Carolina embryo. Mom and Dad are both alumni, so there was no other choice. That part of my childhood has never been reconciled with the past three years. And I guess that's why I'm such a frothy-mouthed State fan. I've been trying to cram about a decade's worth of support for the Wolfpack into four undergrad years, just to erase the parts of my life spent rooting for my school's most hated rival.

Why blot out the memories? Maybe it's because I didn't get accepted there. (What can I say, it's true.)

Maybe it's because my brother got a worthless degree from UNC, and I have to keep loaning him

Head to Head

N.C. State vs North Carolina

State on Offense
North Carolina on Defense

NCSU offensive line averages: 272 lbs.
UNC defensive line averages: 276 lbs.

RUNNING: On the ground, the Pack features four backs capable of breaking a game open, and freshman Tremayne Stephens has been on a roll of late. Against Wake Forest, Stevens rolled up 189 yards on the ground. Brian Fitzgerald should be ready, which bolsters State's second ranked running game. Carolina is sixth in the conference as it is and their defense is banged up. State has had a week to rest.

PASSING: The threat through the air for the Pack is Eddie Goines, one of the top 10 receivers in the nation. Goines and Co. average 12.4 yards per catch, and the only thing the UNC secondary has that the Pack passing game doesn't is a nickname. "The Rude Boys" of Carolina's secondary gave up over 300 yards passing to a mediocre Georgia Tech team which only had the ball for two minutes in the third quarter.

North Carolina on Offense
State on Defense

UNC offensive line averages: 282 lbs.
NCSU defensive line averages: 267 lbs.

RUNNING: An unstoppable force meets an immovable object. Carolina's tandem of Johnson and Johnson are first in the ACC and 14th in the nation in rushing, averaging 238 yards a game. They are the heart of Carolina's offense and they know it. Expect Johnson and Johnson to respond.

PASSING: As good as Jason Stanicek may be, the fact remains that Carolina's passing game is ranked eighth in the ACC. This is not a good statistic when you face a team whose pass defense is first in the ACC and seventh in the country. Stanicek has also thrown more interceptions (six) than touchdowns (five), which bodes well for William Strong and James Walker, who each have two picks.

Special Teams:

The Pack might have Steve Videtic, but that doesn't help when the team has to punt. Carolina sports the best punt return unit in the nation, while the Pack barely averages 30 yards a punt, which places them 105th in the country.

Coaching:

North Carolina coach Mack Brown does his darndest to coach his team out of big games, and is loath to throw deep. He seems quick to scrap his game plan (see: Gator Bowl v. Alabama) but turning UNC around in six years is why he's considered the conference's second-best coach. O' Cain may not have that kind of resume, but State's strength is in a solid core of assistants that know their job and do it well.

Intangibles:

If the Pack doesn't have incentive to win this game, who knows what it would take. Carolina came in last year, beat State in Carter-Finley and attacked its players on the sidelines. UNC faces the unsavory prospect of two straight losses, a long vacation from the Top 25, and a fourth-rate fruit bowl if it loses. Both teams have plenty of motivation to make this the most heated game in years.

Prediction:

WOLFPACK 24, TAR HEELS 21

Cross country limps to ACCs

■ The men's and women's cross country teams aren't sure how they will do at the ACC championships.

BY DAVID HONEA
STAFF WRITER

The N.C. State men's cross country team renews its annual battle with Wake Forest, while the Wolfpack women may see their long string of ACC titles come to an end at tomorrow's ACC cross country championships in Atlanta.

In the last four years, N.C. State and Wake Forest have each won two ACC titles and finished second twice. The Deacons won last year at Clemson, crushing a Wolfpack team that had been favored to win its third straight title.

Wake is a vastly different team this year, having graduated five runners that earned all-ACC honors last season. But State is in a similar position, with Tony Riley, the 1993 individual champion, out with a broken ankle and Pat Joyce, the ACC's top freshman last year, nursing a shin injury.

As a result, no one is really sure what to expect, and although Wake and State were rated 1-2 in a poll of conference coaches, Clemson and Georgia Tech were close behind. "The meet is really unpredictable this season," N.C. State coach Rollie Geiger said. "Only three of the top 14 finishers from last year are running, so the team that does the best job of moving new people to the front will win. Most of the individual all-ACC spots (awarded to the top 10 finishers) are really up for grabs, too."

One newcomer State will be counting on to do well is Jose Gonzalez. A junior transfer from Northern Idaho, Gonzalez has been the Wolfpack's top runner all season and should battle Georgia Tech's Kevin Graham and Clemson's Kevin Hogan for the individual title.

After that group, Geiger could not see any established pecking order in the conference, or even within the Wolfpack lineup. "Any one or several of our next six guys could be in the top 10," he said. "Or we might not have anyone there. We just won't know how we measure up until we run, because we haven't faced any of the other good teams."

State's most consistent runners, after Gonzalez, have been freshman Joe Wirgau and junior Mike Brooks. Wirgau could become the first freshman since 1990 to make the all-ACC team, while Brooks is looking to improve significantly on last year's 30th place finish.

Junior Chip Furman (14th in 1992, 15th in 1993) is the team's top returning runner and has a history of running well in the ACC meet. Furman missed two meets due to an early season illness, but should be back to full strength. Senior Jason Vigilante was also a top 20 finisher last year and hopes to improve his performance this year.

Sophomore James Bache and freshman Jon Hunt have been very close to the Wolfpack's top five runners in early meets and Geiger thinks they will provide crucial depth and could move into the

SPORTS STAFF REPORT

State - Carolina. Need anything else be said?

Plenty. N.C. State's No. 25 Wolfpack enters Saturday's game against No. 24 North Carolina as a five-point underdog, but a host of uncertainties keep the game a lot closer than that.

It's a toss-up. "It's a pride factor," Coach Mike O' Cain said. "We have a lot of players from North Carolina, and they played with men that are on the North Carolina squad. We have tremendous respect for them. It's a fun football game, and it's a pressure game."

On paper, State's greatest head-tohead strength over the Tar Heels is its rushing defense. Carl Reeves anchors a defense that's second in the ACC against the rush and seventh in the country. The Pack has given up only 81 yards per game.

The Wolfpack has not faced a running team as strong as North Carolina. But the highly-touted Johnson and Johnson backfield has not lived up to the pre-season hype.

The offensive line is huge but banged-up, and has been for the better part of the season. Still, UNC possesses the top-ranked rushing offense in the conference.

Carolina's run defense left a lot to be desired last week at Virginia. They do have a talented and experienced linebacking corps. The line is big and deep, but apparently very movable. The Heels have the sixth ranked rushing defense in the conference.

The Pack carries its own stable of high-entire running backs. The emergence of Tremayne Stephens against Wake Forest adds another name to the list. If Brian Fitzgerald's aching shoulder will let him play, then the Pack's running game is, at the least, comparable.

The air battle clearly favors State. Enough has been said about Eddie "Big Play" Goines and the other receivers. They have been rather quiet of late, as the running game

A paper that is entirely the product of the student body becomes at once the official organ through which the thoughts, the activity and in fact the very life of the campus are registered. College life without its journal is blank.

Technician, vol. 1, no. 1, February 1, 1920

Apathy drives need for advice

Student Government needs help. And it wants your suggestions.

Student Government. What can one say about it? It sucks? It's a waste of a thought process? It's an elite activity whose sole purpose is to elevate the egos of certain students?

Maybe, maybe not. The real questions is: What can our student government really do? It's not like the U.S. Government, which can pass laws, change the way things are done and actually make a difference.

So what exactly can student government do, besides making the ticket policy at the beginning of the year and passing hollow resolutions?

Well, it can take abuse, but not very well. It can take your student fees and dish them back out to other clubs (they succeed at this) and to themselves.

But none of that really counts. Some university administrator could do all that, and probably better.

The Student Body Constitution and Student Body Statutes define each branch of Student Government. But they may as well be written in Pig Latin for all they're read, followed or even understood. Highlighting those documents' inconsistencies would leave nothing but yellow pages. Student Government should, in theory, represent you, the student. But it has not, does not, and may never do that.

And guess whose fault that is.

Yours.

N.C. State would rank number one in student apathy, if a poll was ever taken (the paradox being that no one would care enough to answer the poll). Did you even vote in the last election? Do you even know when the last election was? If not, then you're in the majority.

The Student Senate wants your suggestions, and one would guess the other branches of Student Government do as well. So give Student Senate your input, your ideas, your complaints and your theories. But most of all, give them feedback — positive or negative.

To whom do you give your suggestions? The best bet would be your student senator, but since most members of the campus population could not say who their senator is if a gun was held to their head, send your suggestions to Student Senate President Megan Jones, Box 7318, NCSU Campus, or e-mail the Student Government officers at NUSCSGA@Pullen.Bas.NCSU.Edu.

If Jones receives more than three letters from the student body, it probably should be interpreted as the Seventh Sign.

Commentary

Limbaugh's appeal is frightening

A friend recommended I give Rush Limbaugh's most recent book a good read. She said it would open my mind to some of the political realities right of center. I seem to be one of the few people who still support President Clinton, even while public approval is waning. The economy is in good shape, the deficit is shrinking and America is involved in no major wars.

The president's foreign policy, supposedly the chink in his armor, has been flawless. As a matter of fact, as this column goes to print, the president is in the Middle East overseeing a historic peace agreement. Nevertheless, the Democrats seem to be in trouble with the upcoming elections.

The opening of the introduction says that, "You hold in your hot little hands" the "next publishing milestone." Please. The introduction alone was enough to turn my stomach. I'm sure if Voltaire, Thoreau and Thomas Paine, some of the most respected radicals in history, knew Limbaugh drew upon their quotes, they would probably turn over in their graves.

Historically, the conservatives have mainly been the upper and lower classes. The organization of the guilds in Europe gave birth to the middle class which began to question the system. The French Revolution was spawned by an educated middle class which motivated the peasant revolt. The middle class, once it escaped the bondage and the brainwashing of the upper class, was free to make significant change. Today, there seems to be a growing number of conservatives among the middle class, but it is still less conservative than the upper or lower classes. Limbaugh preaches to those who are against significant change, because they are comfortable on their lofty perch, and those down below who buy his message won't threaten them at all.

One of the first issues which struck me in Limbaugh's book was the environmental discussion. According to him, there is absolutely no reason for our environmental "paranoia" — the evidence supporting ozone depletion is a total hoax, we are not overfishing the oceans and there is no real danger in toxic pesticides. It's funny how fishing villages in Nova Scotia are becoming ghost towns, due to recently imposed fishing regulations. There are not enough fish left to drive the economy. North Carolina is considering a first time saltwater fishing license to generate revenue and to aid the ailing offshore sea life. Anyone who has been an avid saltwater fisherman within the last decade will tell you we are hurting.

There is an ozone hole above the Arctic circle which is increasing in size. Even former President Bush acknowledged the problem and advocated reduction in chlorofluorocarbons. Scientists have evidence right down to the actual chemical equation taking place. NASA has flown satellites through the area in question and skin cancer rates are on the increase. Global warming is still questionable, but the weather seems to be awfully strange lately. There are documented cases about the dangers of pesticides. There are laws and regulations on the books prohibiting the use of certain chemicals. Pesticides are also helpful when managed correctly, but I don't think we should give the farmers a free-for-all with pesticides.

Limbaugh says that pharmaceutical companies are not engaged in the practice of "mass rip-offs" and "greedy profiteering." He neglects to mention drug costs have risen nearly 200 percent, within the last five years. There is a need for research and development funds, but you don't have to have a degree in economics to recognize price gouging. If you are sick and need medicine, you will pay an outrageous price to get it. The CEO's of these companies are scoring huge salaries in the name of research and development.

I am neither a Marxist nor an anti-technologist. I believe in the pursuit of technology because therein lies the answers to the problems which plague the environment and society at large, due to our burgeoning population. But technology must be developed with the main emphasis on the human predicament, not in the name of the almighty dollar and the bloating of the upper class.

The danger in Limbaugh's radio program, TV show and books is that it causes people to drop their guard against real problems. History has proven that when you drop your guard you become vulnerable. When the middle class starts to believe in someone like Limbaugh with his unfounded rhetoric, I fear a knockout punch might be just around the corner.

Let's make them bluer!

Carolina is going to win this never stepped out on that field Saturday.

When it comes right down to it, many N.C. State students feel jealousy when compared to Chapel Hill students.

Maybe it's all the national attention UNC-Chapel Hill get or all of the Carolina hype in the local press. Possibly it's their reputation for sophistication, while we get the rap for being a bunch of farmers.

Saturday, they are going to get that little Sears candy dish, which means they are supposed to have the best overall athletics program in the nation, and we aren't getting snoot.

And if we didn't already feel low enough, they beat us in football last year: at Carter-Finley, 35-to-14. To make matters worse, the football soothsayers in Vegas are picking them to do the same thing again this year in Chapel Hill. They are ranked ahead of us in the polls.

We might as well stay home Saturday and not answer the phone — possibly hide in the closet until it's all over — Right?

Hold on a Cotton Bowl-pickin' minute! This jazz is getting played up and we don't have to take it anymore.

That last game was a fluke — we beat them five years in a row. The Wolfpack is going to descend on Kenan Stadium like a plague and embarrass those pretty boys in front of their mamas. They don't even know what's coming.

Thousands of fanatical, howling State fans are going to fill that so-called cultural mecca to encourage our boys to do some damage to their little football club.

Wolfpack Coach Mike O'Cain is bringing a team which will make Carolina's look like a football version of the Bad News Bears. Eddie Goines is going to push his receiving record out further, and the Four Horsemen are going to put cleat marks on the back of many a Tar Heel. Carl Reeves and the defense are going to hurt someone. The Ram's Club may have to refund membership dues.

A special thanks should go out to ABC for allowing everyone to see this butt-kickin' in living color. We can all witness our team in its gridiron glory and see just who has an inferiority complex come Saturday.

After all, NCSU is an up-and-coming university while UNC-CH is more or less standing in place. Take their much-ballyhooded series lead, for instance. Psst: They've got just a one-win lead since the ACC formed in 1953.

See you on the Brickyard after the game.

Enough! The band is better this year

We, the under-signed students, feel it is about time we express what is really happening with the marching band instead of reading about it in weighted columns and articles written by people not associated with this year's band.

Even though this letter will probably never appear in Technician, we have to at least voice another point of view.

We have a great marching band organization. This is not to say it is without problems — but what organization isn't? The current members tell me that this year's band is different. Members tell me it is running better, playing better and much more efficient. After viewing tapes of last year and this year I too believe in the band's improvement. The crowds' cheers not only show approval, but give encouragement too. We are dedicated to producing the best halftime entertainment, and will continue to do so.

We are not so stupid as to blindly follow a dictator. As a public school band director of five years, I have often remarked that Overmier is too easy and allows students to make too many decisions. If he can be accused of anything, it is presenting what appears to be immeasurable challenges and motivating the band to try. If it is "his way or the highway," then why has the student staff had more than one opportunity to change music, drill, trips we take, dress code and so many other things your column space prevents us from mentioning? If we were truly being abused and mistreated, at least give us the benefit of being smart enough to walk away.

All I know is we still have a large, dedicated and willing group of students who are proud to be known as the N.C. State "Power Sound of the South!" Like the athletic teams and cheerleaders, we will continue to try to be the best, continue to give our best and expect you to accept nothing but our best. All we ask is that you consider the majority of opinions, including us.

Editor's Note: This letter was signed by 94 other students.

An established religion would damage the U.S.

After reading Colin Burch's most recent column on the separation of church and state, I'd like to quote the first line out of the bill of rights in the United States Constitution: "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof..." I think that means Congress will not make a law (no matter how much they would like) that establishes a particular religion for the country, and will not make a law that prohibits, or even infringes (read: will not tax) upon the practice of any religion.

Indeed, the "In God We Trust" on the money we spend is likely unconstitutional. I would be happy with it's erasure. To prohibit religious resources to government workers and the population at large is clearly ridiculous, as is so well described in Mr. Burch's article.

All disestablishmentarians ask is that no single church or collection of churches is endorsed by the government, and for the government not to interfere with the practice of various religions.

Prayer in schools establishes a religious position on prayer. Making abortions legal establishes a religious position on the fetus. The pledge of allegiance establishes God as someone the country is under and in service too.

I think there are grounds to be unhappy with the establishment of a religion for the country. We are a free nation. There are many rights and uncountable responsibilities that go with that. We must be vigilant against the establishment of religion in this country, and our founding fathers paved the way for endless debate, and limitless freedom.
