Tim Rogers, second vice chair for the Wake County Democratic Party, said he had been at the polling location most of the day and estimated about 500 people had voted Phy 5 p.m. He said over 300 of them were NCSU students.

"This is a good turnout for a non-presidential election," he said. "The biggest mon-presidential election," he said. "The biggest mon-presidential year was the Gantt-Helms senate race in 1990."

Some students were active in working for their parties candidates.

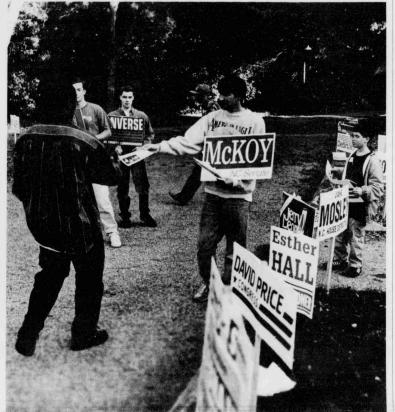

Christopher Grawburg, vice chair of the NCSU College Republicans, said his party received a lot of positive response at the location — which he said has been a traditionally Democratic voting poll.

"There has been a lot of Republican support from students and non-college voters as well," he said. "We called members and have had people out here all day."

Rogers, a former NCSU student, said many students registered to vote at the precinct.

10 "This precinct is one of the biggest in the county," he said. "Over 5,300 people are registered to vote and around two-thirds of them are State students."

"I've been voting here since I moved to North Carolina," said Chris Garrett, a senior in biochemistry. "The elections can impact everyone on campus."

Brian Anderson, a senior in aerospace engineering, also said voting was important. "There are a lot of close races this year."

Residents: signs and lights poor

■ The last Chancellor's Liaison Meeting revealed some safety problems on Fraternity Court.

BY EDITH THORNTON

What could be inconvenient for emergency workers may be deadly for residents. That's what representatives from Fraternity Court said at the Oct. 26 Chancellor's Liaison Meeting. They said they thought signs on the street are confusing. They also complained about the scarcity of blue lights and overabundance of people on the street.

Roger McDaniel, president of the Interfraternity Count is aid during fire drills the fire trucks wander around Fraternity Court because there are no signs that mark West Fraternity Court from South Fraternity Court.

No signs lead to the Sorority Duplex, making it hard to locate. And the curbside address numbers have faded and are illegible, he said. McDaniel also said the bike paths connecting Centennial Campus with main campus and the new walkway from the Avent Ferry Complex have brought more people to Fraternity Court. And with more people come more risks, he said.

"We want to avoid congregating outside Fraternity Court buildings because even though we rent the buildings, we are held responsible." McDaniel said. "The safety problems put our charter in danger."

Laura Babinski, president of the Panhellenic Association, said she is worried about the safety around the Sorority Duplex. The area is well lit, she said, but the bike path runs right by the building.

"The only concern I have about the bike path is that bringing in extra traffic brings in more crime," Babinski said.

McDaniel said there are only two

Asia, California influence work

■ A campus concert will offer a mixture of types of music.

By MARY ELLEN KENNY

The Paul Dresher Ensemble will cross cultural boundaries tonight in Stewart Theatre as it performs its most recent concert program. "Looking West to the East." The program is a conglomeration of musical styles and techniques, both traditional and modern. The cultures influencing this performance are those on the Pacific Rim, as well as those on the American West Coast. "My goal is to bring to as wide an audience as possible a repertory of contemporary chamber music." Dresher said. "I profoundly believe (this type of contemporary chamber music," Dresher said.

"I profoundly believe [this type of music] can cross traditional aesthetic boundaries and appeal to many diverse audiences."
Dresher said he incorporates the guitar into his new work, something has never done before.
"In fact, this is the first time I have written a purely instrumental ensemble work utilizing electronics of any kind," he said. "I hope to discover ways to have the guitar evoke qualities that aren't just associated with either rock 'n' roll or jazz styles. And I hope the amplified acoustic instruments will meet the intensity of the electric guiar on an equal footing."

Instruments involved in this celectic sound of the ensemble include electronic percussion, electronic keyboards, violin, bassoon and clarinet. Piano, electric guitar and live electronics are incorporated as well.

Dresher and his fellow composers. Bun Ching Lam and Carl Stone, strive to produce a certain sound by using unique combinations of these instruments. The individualistic sound of "Looking West to the East" is representative of the musical and artistic development of the composers' careers at this point.

Other members of the ensemble include Craig Fry on the violin, Paul Hanson on the woodwinds, William Winamt and Gene Refkin on percussion and Phil Aaberg on piano and keyboards.

Some of the musical compositions that can be heard at tonight. Some of the musical compositions that can be heard at tonight apperformance are "Channels Passing," "Din of Iniquity" and "Coyote Buids North America."

The original version of "Channels Passing," was composed in 1981 with such instruments in mind as the flute, the oboe and the clarinet. This piece has been updated to the ensemble's current, more electric style.

Paul Dresher said his new concert is his most ambitious.

"Covote Builds North America" is "Coyote Builds North America" is a story-telling piece with Native American influences. "I hope this music in some way evokes the energy and spirit of Native American drumming and dancing." Dresher said.

Dresher said.

Indeed, energy and spirit are to be expected in tonight's Paul Dresher Ensemble concert performance of "Looking West to the East." This one of a kind program begins at 8 p.m., and is brought to Nc. State's Stewart Theatre by NCSU Center Stage. Bring your ID — student admission is only $5.

The program keeps the creditors from sending the debtor bills the debtor cannot pay.

Since the Consumer Credit Consumer Gredit Connecling Program is a national organization, it has considerable bargaining power with creditors. In many cases, the negotiations can not only lower a debtor's minimum monthly balance, but can even drop the late fees altogether.

said creditors are more inclined to work with students if they know students will repay the debt. Clearing the debt is important not just for future credit, but for peace of mind, she said.

"I've seen first hand what stress from debt can do to people," Stitnick said. "One young man we helped was so absorbed by the burden of his debt that he was physically exhausted. Not knowing then he could pay his debt severely altered his mindset."

Although it is easy to qualify for the Debt Repayment Program, there are some factors that go into accepting clients, Sittnick said. A person's income, general expenses and amount of debt are taken into account.

About half of all applications are accepted, said Allen Clary, an agent for the program.

Since the organization is a nonprofit agency that gets funds from United Way, the fees charged are reduced. There is a $20 fee for the initial consultation. If accepted, there is a monthly fee of less than $5, which is used to pay for postage.

Students who don't have credit problems can still use the Consumer Credit Counseling Program. It also offers a budget counseling program that can help people avoid accruing a debt.

On the offense's biggest day, his career ended

■ On a day when he got back to putting up his usual numbers, Eddie Goines' college career was cut short by a knee injury.

It was definitely a shootout. The most exciting game by far that we've been involved in this year, and the most points that have been scored in a game since I've been been.

For those who were not able to see the game, you missed a classic offensive battle. A total of 92 points scored, two exhilarating kickoff returns for touchdowns and a last-second field goal.

I was very happy we won, but it was hard to show it; because before Videtich even ran on the field, I knew my college career had ended prematurely.

This caused some very emotional and devastating feelings. So many things were running through my mind. All of a sudden, one of the true joys of my life was no longer there. It was taken away by one play — three to five seconds.

There are no words to truly explain my state of being at that time.

But I can say that I feel a lot better and more positive now. That's because of five reasons: God, family, friends, coaches and teammates. Not to mention the Wolfpack supporters whom I greatly appreciate as well.

"All of a sudden one of the true joys in my life was no longer there. It was taken away by one play three to five seconds."

This next game is part of a rivalry. It's Homecoming, and, most importantly, it's Duke.

Their Virginia win has given us some new respect for their team. Their attitude is totally different.

But still, we're fed up with all the hype they've received. We're tired of being in their and others' shadow

This is our chance to come out of it, and show them that though they are ranked, though the media loves them, and though they are 8-1, there is one thing.

They're still Duke.

Still going: women's soccer makes NCAA tournament

■ For the third time this season, the Wolfpack women's soccer faces a contest with Clemson. This time, in the NCAA Tournament.

It keeps going, and going, and going.

And we're not referring to that annoying bunny.

Instead, it's the N.C. State women's soccer team and the nature of its season. On Sunday night, the Wolfpack had its season extended, again. It was awarded an invitation to play in the 1994 NCAA Soccer Championship. After fighting through the ACC Tournament and regular season, who will the Pack have to face in the first round of the NCAA Tournament?

Tournament?

The Clemson Tigers.

That's right. For the third time this season. State is preparing to face the Tigers. Clemson came away from the first game earlier this season with a 4-2 victory over the Pack. However, in the second meeting, in the ACC Tournament, State pulled off the upset with a 2-1 victory." "I would like to say this about Clemson," head coach Alvin Comeal began, "outside of UNC, I thought that they were the best playing unit that we have faced. I thought they moved the ball around effectively and were well-organized." A primary factor when the two teams meet will be revenge. In the second meeting, the Pack thoroughly embarrassed the Tigers doubtful to play due to the concussion she suffered in the first round, Staples could dominate. "Thori Staples is just one fabulous player," Corneal said. "She is probably the fastest defender in the world today, and her ability to attack will also lend us a lot of support."

Another factor in making it two in row against Clemson will be the Pack's speed. After the ACC tourney loss, Tiger head coach Tracey Leone said Monica Hall "was so fast that it is almost impossible to mark the."

State will also need more of forward Stephanie Sander's shots to find their way into the back of the net.

"She is a great runner off the ball, and if she doesn't score goals, she creates opportunities for our midfielders." Most importantly, the Pack needs to keep the ball upfield. Goalie Katherine Mertz looked very shaky against Duke, letting several easy shots bounce off of her hands. It is up to second team All-ACC selection Catherine Zaborowki to clear the ball early and often, and Suzanne Gerrior has to keep pushing forward.

Hail and farewell, Number 19

■ A premature exit from college football doesn't college football doesn't erase the impact Eddie Goines had on the game, the team and the fans.

Farewell, Mr. Goines. As Eddie Goines was helped off the field Saturday night, an era losed. He didn't deserve to go out like that.

And the worst part is that because of the injury, the school's all-time, all-everything receiver will always be overshadowed by a number of things.

all-everything receiver will always be overshadowed by a number of things.
Suddenly, everyone has lost their expectations and hopes for Goines' future, except him. The injury is career-ending only with respect to his college career.
Knee injuries like his ACL tear are happening more frequently these days. Plus. more and more people are completely rebounding from them. Goines is scheduled for surgery in a few weeks and then six months of rehab. If all goes as planned, he? If he li09 percent well before NFL preseason training camp opens next July.
Also tarnishing his history will be his senior year. Even before the injury, this had not been an "Eddie Goines" season. His numbers were down from an extraordinary junior campaign. But that's because fewer balls were being thrown to him.
The emergence of four outstanding running backs has given the Pack less reason to throw. If Ternayne Stephens can get 150 yards on the ground, why throw the ball?
Last year there were so many comebacks, so many clutch passes.

ball?

Last year there were so many comebacks, so many clutch passes. And Goines pulled the Pack out of the fire time after time.

There was no campaign to get Goines any award like the Heisman. If he went to Notre Danne, he would have been the greatest receiver since, well, Tim Brown. If he was a tailback at UNC, heaven help us. I don't know if that is to this school's favor or detriment.

if that is to this school's favor or detriment.

A player like Goines is almost as area as a running back like Barry Sanders. Lots of guys have the talent to do what he does. And I have seen some guys that have more talent than Goines. But what he has that no one else comes from within.

Sure, he's kind of a ham when the cameras are on him after the game. And he's got that million dollar smile (just check his mug shot with his column). But his determination has made him what he is. He just wants it more than anybody else. Nothing derails his focus. That's why there was no trashtalkin', no high-steppin' and no end-zone dances ast fit was his only visit. He just went out and did it, again and again.

Now he's gone and we didn't even get to say thank you. He holds every career receiving record responsibility on himself.

As his numbers this season began to fall off from what he had projected for himself, he only worked harder. As he saw more and more balls being handed off rather than thrown, he worked harder.

So now he's gone, and we didn't even get to say thank you. He holds every Wolfpack career receiving even get to say thank you. He holds every Wolfpack career receiving record.

There was that diving, one-handed, 50-yard catch against Duke two years ago. Or his touchdown catches at Clemson and Duke last year that ignited fourth-quarter railies. He struck again at Clemson this year with a sensational 76-grab in double coverage.

Whatever was asked of him he delivered without any expectations of reward. His reward was just getting the chance to do it again on the next play.

CONNELLS

Raleigh's own Connells are back with a new batch of catchy tunes and lilting melodies that have become the band's trademark. The Connells' latest release, "New Boy," is a six song EP with a mix of studio and live tracks and even a classic rock cover.

The EP's title track is typical Connells. The simple construction and emphasis on the melody come as no great surprise to anyone familiar with the band, "Logan Street" and "Wonder Why" offer more of the same happy, laid-back stuff.

In what seems like a pretty odd choice for the band, they included a cover of Jethor Tull's classic, "Living in the Past." Unfortunately, it was a pretty bad choice. With their laid-back style, the Connells manage to sap every bit of energy out of the song, leaving it to fall fall.

The most interesting tracks on the album are the two live ones. "Fun and Cames" has a little more emotion in its vocals and has a slightly different style from the Connells' usual fare.

The live version of "New Boy" is far better than its studio counterpart. The song is stripped down to its essentials and lacks the precision of the same shall back the precision of the same shall back the precision of the song leaving the somewhat bland song to fife.

Farss of the Connells won't be disappointed with "New Boy." In fact, they'll probably find themselves singing along.

LOTION

Rising alternative stars Lotion offer an eclectic mix of tempos and styles in their latest release, "Full Isaac." The band mixes heavy percussion with melodic vocals and a wide array of guitar sounds to create something new and different.

The band seems constantly on the verge of exploding into something loud and uncontrolled but keeps itself tied to complex melodies. This doesn't stop them from experimenting, though. "Full Isaac" features a variety of songs that will satisfy almost any alternative appetite.

"Dr. Link" offers a complex, syncopated melody flavored by swirling, repetitious guitars. The tempo constantly changes until the song breaks down into a mass of noise.

The band them shifts gears for the slow and mournful "Paas."

"La Boost" starts out slow but explodes into something almost impossibly fast.

"La poost-starts un son-ou-criffast.

Another notable track, "Around," starts with a simple drum beat. Other instruments are added one by one until this musical soup comes to a boil. Whether you like the simply melodic or the heavily intense, Lotion has something for you. Their anything-goes style and willingness to experiment makes Lotion something truly unique.

Connells put on the Ritz

■ Raleigh's favorite band, The Connells, played to an adoring crowd at the Ritz Friday.

Lotion, rocked The Ritz in Raleigh Friday inght with unforgettable and powerful performances.

Lotion, a New York City based band, has been touring with the Connells for the past month.

They've hit Ohio, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia and cities from Boston all the way down to New Orleans. Friday's show was the next to last performance, with a Charlotte show-wrapping up the end of heir tour.

When Lotion hit the stage, the audience was rewarded with a loud, energetic crowd-pleasing set. So pleasing that a mosh pit was formed in front of the stage, consisting of falling limbs and eventually an escort out for one over-excited guy. This kind of behavior is not surprising, though. Lotion produced the perfect sound for the hurling of bodies, and no one seemed to worry.

Interestingly, one of the guitarists from Lotion was celebrating his birthday the day of the performance, and the crowd got the pleasure of joining together to sing "Happy Birthday" to Jim.

While everyone seemed to thoroughly enjoy the hard-core jams of Lotion, the excitement did not even compare to the display when the Connells took the stage.
Most of the songs the Connells sang came from their last two albums. "Flu and

"Slack Jawed" and "New Boy" hit the air.
the crowd went wild, encouraging the Connells to put a little extra into the performance.
The lettover mosh pit from Lotion's set continued throughout the show, to the surprise of many, including the Connells.
When asked about the vivacity of the crowd, the band members were nothing but pleased.
"The crowd was great." David Connell

"The crowd was great," David Connell said, "They didn't get in our way at all. We were pleased that everyone was so

The band's original lyrics and music, written mostly by Mike Connell, are enjoyable and inspiring. The 10-year-old band's music is as popular as ever.
Mike Connell said he doesn't use any strict strategy when writing songs.
"I just sit down with my guitar and cross my fingers and see what happens," he said.

Though guitarist George Huntley plans to put out an album of his own, the band members say they are thinking about starting work on another album in December.
"We're going to try a few new things this time," Mike Connell said. "It's just going to be a hit-or-miss process."

A paper that is entirely the product of the student body becomes at once the official organ through which the thoughts, the activity and in fact the very life of the campus are registered. College life without its owneral is blank.

Technician, vol. 1. no. 1. February 1, 1920

On-line evaluations are a plus

Printed copies are still a goal, but an electronic version of how students see faculty members is a big step.

he new availability of grade distribution for classes with more than 50 people is the best thing yet for letting students know about their prospective teachers. Provost Phillip Stiles has approved student access, and soon everyone campus will be able to reach the information through the Eos/Unity computer system. Student Government is now just waiting for a password that will be advertised as oon as it is known.

soon as it is known.

Students pay to take classes here and are entitled to know as much about their prospective teachers as possible. It is true, however, that students should meet professors halfway in the struggle for good grades. Yet it is also the responsibility of the professor to help the students not hurt them.

Ideally, students will be able to look at the grade distribution before registering for the spring semester. But seniors and juniors already have begun to register.

In the long run, the university may be able to look at how students feel about given instructors. If a lot of students avoid a certain professor, it should clearly indicate to the university there is a problem with that professor.

This is a good move toward letting students know more about the instructors they will have. Students will be able to tell which Students will be able to tell which professors hand out unusually low grades — the political science instructor who gives three B's and no As in a class of 30, for instance. By looking at the grade distributions, students can make the decision to not take the class with that professor.

Student Government would eventually like to see the evaluations published. Members have been researching the possibility of printing a booklet of teacher evaluations.

Student-teacher evaluations often get bad reviews. But a recent report from the N.C. Center for Public Policy Research notes that the information can be a reliable source if the information is interpreted correctly

The publishing of grade distribution is a step in the right direction toward helping students get the most out of their four or five years here — not to mention getting the most for their

Religion without reason can be dangerous

From the Brickyard Preacher, to the InterVarsity Christian Fellowship, to the department of Religion and Philosophy, to this opinion page of Technician one fact should be very clear to the visitor on the N.C. State campus: this university is buzzing with spiritual soul seeking and religious activity.

Perhaps the reason religious groups are so present in campus life at NCSU is the period of life which most NCSU students are experiencing. Many students are living away from home for the first time. They have left their families and hometown friends to become part of a huge, overwhelming community in which they may feel more like a number than a person.

may teet more like a number man a person. Students are seeking stability, security and familiar people who can make all of these changes seem a little less threatening. Many religious groups provide constructive communities where students can find others who come from a similar background. They will have to learn in an atmosphere with people, situations and values drastically different from what they have ever experienced before. This is a great reason for coming to a big place like NCSU in the first place.

The university is a place where students

NCSU in the first place.

The university is a place where students should prepare to be leaders in the outside world, not become dogmatic obedients to a small "in group." Conservative religion makes the statement that the outside world is deprayed and evil; only those people and ideas that can be found inside the religious group are good or right.

Chandler Duncan

The most notorious of conservative Christian handouts on this campus feature stores of socially conscientious people who are condemned to eternal damnation because they did not identify themselves as Christians. These materials and attitudes discourage sprittual growth on this campus because they foster a negative attitude towards the world and those people who fall outside of the conservative "in group."

If religion is to thrive on a college campus, it ought to be of a more solid, intellectually sound, scripturally studious type. Students must learn that one can love God while still having profound appreciation and concern for the world.

Doing what is right, and what is religious is acting reasonably, acting freely and listening to your conscienc not the peer pressure and dogma of a particular group.

My belief may be diametrically opposed to what many Christian groups on campus are espousing. I hold that to bring students into a religious group, coerce them to renounce their freedom, reason and conscience and then to insist that others are depraved unless they do the same is irresponsible and dangerous. It is not a good ministry of Jesus Christ and it does not speak well for the Christian faith in th world.

not speak well for the Christian faith in the world.

Those college students who seek to make their religious faith the driving force in their life must have the strongest of minds and the warmest of hearts. The danger of religion without reason, freedom and conscience is demonstrated in examples ranging from overzealous groups in the Middle East to Branch Davidians in Waco, Texas.

For this reason, students should use his or her intellectual prowess and critical ability in considering religious doctrines. In viewing ancient religious teachings, such as the Bible, it is crucial that the informed student realize the age and complexity of the work he or she is reading.

intornieu south the complexity of the work he or she is reading.

It is through religious scriptures that the great spiritual wisdom of human history has evolved, has been preserved and handed down for thousands of years — it is disrespectful to cut and paste it into a flashly tract to be cast upon the Brickyard like a flurry of party confetti.

While conservatism has its place in our nation's politics and conservative people and ideas contribute greatly to our university, those who espouse conservatism in religion on this campus are destructive and far too many in number. To anyone who takes their religious faith seriously and wishes to truly make it a firm foundation for their life, the journey begins with one important sentence. In religion, liberal is best.

One step ahead of the NCAA

■ New NCAA academic standards point to a strength in N.C. State's athletics program — the Wolfpack has already met and exceeded tudent athletes face new Student athletes race new standards and a new way of life. Both are welcome changes. As usual, the academic standards for N.C. State's athletes are light-years ahead of the National Collegiate Athletic Association's

The new policy, Proposition 16, increases the number of core courses required to 13 and requires higher GPAs.

Previously, the NCAA required the at least a 2.0 GPA on 11 academic core courses, and a 700 SAT score. But NCSU has been requiring higher standards. According to NCSU's faculty athletics representative Arthur Cooper, "In 13 core courses, the GPA and the SAT are tight together in what Cooper, "In 13 core courses, the GPA and the SAT are tied together in what has been referred to as a 'sliding scale.' If you have a high school GPA of 2.0 on 13 core courses, you have to have a SAT of at least 900. If your high school GPA on these core courses is 2.5, you can slip to as low as 700 on the SAT."

With academic standards like these, NCSU can set a national standard, and can be known as a university that turns out scholar-athletes. This is quite an ironic precedent for NCSU to be setting in light of our previous standing in regard to athletes'

academic records

One argument against these new rules is that they'll make it tougher for minority members to attend college. Why so little faith in non-whites? They're just as capable of meeting academic standards as anyone else. And any member of any race who doesn't meet these standards race who doesn't meet these standards shouldn't be at NCSU.

But there's more on the horizon than higher academic standards for athletes at NCSU. In fact, students might find themselves rooming with someone they've seen on television.

Athletics dorms and athletics cafeterias are to become a thing of the past. Athletes might be required to live like, well, normal students.

There's no downside to this. Certainly the student athletes give more to the university. Yes, they need special diets and supplements for physical endurance.

But better still is the school spirit that could come from having student athletes in the dorms. There would never be an ounce of apathy towards the sports programs — apathy the university sees occasionally towards every sport we have — when normal everyday students could say they roomed with the guy shooting free throws on Jefferson Pilot's nationwide TV sports program.

The athletes probably wouldn't have a hard time with this either — NCSU athletes have never been snobs. And besides, they might end up rooming with someone who can help them with their studies.

Chances: Okay, but not great.

Pete Wilson, California Governor, is a happy little moderate Republican who appeals to big states with immigration appeals to big states with immigration problems. Not so great on name recognition, but looks better than the nobodies from Bush's cabinet. Also, he's a Californian who isn't Jerry Brown, which is always a plus. Chances: Long shot, but possible.

Trent Lott and Phil Gramm, Mississippi Trent Lott and Phil Gramm, Mississippi and Texas Senators, are the South's drean team. They aren't running together, but I lump'em together just because they're both southern conservatives. Actually, it would be a great fight: Clinton and Gore v. Gramm and Lott in the tag team match of the century! Too bad the rest of the country won't tune in. Chances: Not too hot. Go see if Hulk Hogan is still available.

Colin "Mr. Cool" Powell, war hero, hasn't even decided if he's a Republican. Sure, no one knows what his views are. Sure he's black. Who cares? He tests better than Buchannan and Qu'ayle against Clinton! Eisenhower II, this is The Return. Chances: As soon as he picks a party, I'll let you know.

Pat "I hate everybody" Buchannan is a professional grouch and occasional political wizard. What can be said about the man who has been demonized by everyone from the New York Times to Comedy Central to my mother? Probably not much, so I'll just shut up. Chances: Go back to CNN. The pay is better, anyway.

So that's it. Or is it? What happens if Bill doesn't run, or drops out after a bad primary showing (a la LBJ in New Hampshire)? Pandemonium! Columnists and journalists won't ever sleep! Elephants and donkeys everywhere in the craziest animal show since Noah's ark! That's politics.

The fifth annual Spell of the Land Symposium will be held today in Caldwell Hall Lounge from 1 to 6 pm. The event, which is free and open to the public, will explore "Myths and Magic, Stories and Spells: Rooted in the Earth."

The Spell of the Land began in 1990 to spark interdisciplinary conversation about the relationship of people and the land. This year's symposium, which is hosted by the College of Humanities and Social Sciences' Arts Studies Program, will attempt to shed some light on magic's dark reputation.
