Internet invades CHASS

Some English teachers are incorporating new technology to prepare students for business and industry.

By LIZ MAHNCKE
STAFF WRITER

Modern technology is slowly invading the halls of Tompkins, Caldwell and Winston. The computer, traditionally an English major's friend for its word processing capabilities, is about to become much more.

Teachers from the College of Humanities and Social Sciences are structuring classes to meet the demands of practical computer knowledge in the workplace. English 314, which focuses on the editing and design of technical documents, is one such class.

"We saw a need to teach English majors document design and layout," said Cynthia Haller, a professor teaching English 314.

She has incorporated computers in her class by requesting communication via e-mail and asking her students to join a user list on the Internet.

"The Internet is a major mode of communication within business and industry, within the workplace and outside," Haller said. "It's being implemented in our culture and it's important we know how to use it."

Robert Schrag could not agree more. He teaches classes for the communication department, and implements the system in his classroom by posting his syllabus on the Internet.

"The Internet is simply the most recent evolution in media systems," he said. "We need to teach students the Internet and other systems."

"We as professors need to use these systems in our classrooms," Schrag said. "It is the next most logical progression."

Schrag teaches classes in interactive media and has little resistance to the adaptation of computer change.

"The students are excited about it," he said. "They are interested in the new technology."

But some students are unhappy with the new changes, especially the changes which involve long term use of the computer labs. With the increased computer involvement in curricula on campus, some of the labs are receiving a thumbs down from students.

"Being computer oriented is reasonable and to our advantage," said senior English major Priscilla Hunter. "But this computer system sucks, particularly for humanities."

Hunter cites time problems with using the humanities computer labs.

"I have been in there twice when it's taken me longer than 35 minutes," she said. "After 35 minutes of messing around, the lab help decided e-mail might be down."

"If the instructors are going to rely on the system, then the system needs to be reliable. It's fun, just not reliable."

Despite the increased emphasis:

Students like Savva Morris use computers to do homework and communicate with teachers.

National director to visit NCSU

The Peace Corps invites students to take a look at its program with information sessions all this week.

By NICOLE BOWMAN

The toughest job you'll ever love. That is the slogan of the Peace Corps, the program that has offered aid to over 90 countries around the world since it was started by President John Kennedy. N.C. State students will have the opportunity to find out how tough the job is when the organization's national director comes to NCSU this week.

Carol Bellamy, the current director of the Peace Corps, is coming to NCSU to help recruit people from around the area. Recruiters and people who served in the Peace Corps will be available to answer questions at a series of sessions this week, culminating with Bellamy's visit.

Bellamy will speak on economic development programs in the Peace Corps Thursday at 4 p.m. in Nelson 240, as part of the College of Management's Executive Leadership Series.

The Peace Corps has a wide variety of programs available for graduating students, said Laura Lauffer, Peace Corps recruiter at NCSU.

People who join the Peace Corps come out with something more, she said.

"Peace Corps gives excellent training," Lauffer said. "It's very hands-on — people come out being

Spacing problems discussed

An NCSU committee criticized the reduced amount of environmental planning for the newest campus in a meeting Thursday.

The N.C. State Physical Environment Committee discussed the possibility of higher parking permit prices, tighter demand for spaces and the lack of landscaping activity at Centennial Campus at a recent meeting.

Among the items discussed at the Thursday afternoon meeting was a proposal from the Transportation Subcommittee, chaired by Mark Labarbera, on the study of doubling the size of the existing Reynolds Coliseum parking deck. The funding from the new deck was to come from a $10 a year increase in parking permits on campus, starting in 1996.

Howard Harrell, director of transportation, told the committee he was asking them to approve the concept, not the fee.

Although the committee did not approve the concept, there was interest in addressing the issue of parking on campus. Hooker, a professor of landscape horticulture, said the problem could be solved with mass transit solutions.

"We need to look toward more than just adding parking lots. That's not improving campus transportation," he said. "Let's focus on reducing the need for single occupancy vehicles, or look at other alternatives."

The committee also discussed environmental problems on Centennial Campus.

The Campus Planning and Design Subcommittee discussed a resolution regarding Centennial Campus' planning. It said the construction taking place there was not up to their environmental expectations.

Among the concerns cited in the resolution were the lack of sensitivity of Centennial Campus development to the local ecology, low priority given to landscape development in the construction process, the lack of adequate "people" spaces and the lack of charm, appeal, or quality anticipated from the initial vision.

The resolution was tabled in order to rework its wording.

The subcommittee suggests that when funding does not allow for completeness in any portion of

Center helps provide positive alternatives

A Raleigh youth program uses black history to help local at-risk children.

By DYAN BAYSINGER
STAFF WRITER

Black history is taught year-round at the Wake County Youth Services Center, not just during February.

The main objective of the center, which is located in southeast Raleigh (Downtown), is to give at-risk children a sense of identity.

Children are referred to the after-school program by schools or the court.

The center's staff is comprised of social workers and other professionals who are dedicated to preventing juvenile delinquency in southeast Raleigh.

The children at the center who are referred to the center are usually black males in sixth, seventh and eighth grade who live in high crime, drug infested areas of Raleigh.

The center provides students with a program that gives them tutoring, education, recreation and a sense of security.

Many students from N.C. State and other nearby schools do volunteer tutoring and internships at the center.

This month the staff is busy preparing the children for the annual African-American Heritage Celebration, due to be held on the 23rd.

Each child is given the name of a successful African-American from history or from the present. The children have two weeks to research that person and make up a skit to tell the rest of the center what they learned. Creativity is encouraged.

Brian Autry, a sixth grader from Martin Middle School, said the skits are a lot of fun.

Finding out about blacks who are accomplished but not famous is ideal, said Curtis Bryant, an 8th grader from Leesville. He says he wants to learn what his ancestors "...stood for and fought for."

Staff and student volunteers at the center said that a child needs to know where he has come from to know where to go.

"We shouldn't just learn one view of history, we should learn about all history internationally," said Danielle Reyes, a sophomore pre-med student at NCSU.

Reyes said all ethnic groups have their own history and their own culture. "People should know something about everyone," she said.

Loretta Johnson, a staff member at the Wake County Youth Services Center in Downtown Raleigh, said the students do not learn enough about black history in the public schools.

"If you ask the kids, they'll tell you not much is taught," she said.

Researchers win prize with paper

A research paper co-authored by three N.C. State researchers has won first prize in a national competition of the Electron Microscopy Society of America. The winning paper, "Titanium Nitride on Silicon and Titanium Nitride on Gallium Arsenide Epitaxial Heterostructures," was written by Jagdish Narayan of Raleigh, distinguished university professor of material science and engineering; Kasichatunula Jagannadh of Raleigh, associate research professor of materials science and engineering; and graduate student Tzevatanka Jelava of Durham.

The paper dealt with the development of futuristic materials structures for advanced microelectronic devices. The structures are fabricated by a thin-film growth mechanism called domain epitaxy, invented and patented in 1994 by Narayan.

Preview party to raise money for Arboretum

The 1995 Raleigh Home and Garden Show Preview Party, scheduled for 6 to 9 p.m. Wednesday, Feb. 15, at the Raleigh Civic and Convention Center, will benefit the N.C. State Arboretum. The party is open to the public. Admission is $10 and includes a wine-and-cheese reception with Dixieland jazz performed by Dick Gable and His All-Stars.

Guests get a chance to see the show without dealing with the large crowds that are expected after the official opening on Thursday, Feb. 16.

The NCSU Arboretum was named the nation's top public garden in 1992 by the American Association of Botanical Gardens and Arboreta. Dedicated to the discovery of new and better plants for the Southeast, it has more than 5,000 plant varieties on display and features a water garden, a Japanese garden, a white garden, a rose garden, a shade house, shrub borders and a 450-foot perennial border considered one of the finest in the South.

 development, that decisions on a short term basis not compromise the quality of the overall vision.

Speaking in favor of the current development, Claude McKinney, Centennial Campus coordinator, said some things had to be done to make the buildings more economically interesting for outside industry.

The shortcuts they made were necessary to lure industry and government representatives to the area, he said.

McKinney also said the financial resources were not available to make the campus more visually appealing.

"The money is just not there to add the public spaces and landscaping that is desired," he said.

 mature, independent and able to think on their feet."

Graduating students aren't the only people who can be Peace Corps volunteers.

Peace Corps has several business programs in the former Soviet Union and Eastern Europe, which are available to experienced, older professionals.

There isn't a language barrier for potential Peace Corps volunteers. It is active in about 90 countries, including ones where knowing English is enough.

"Students don't need to speak a second language to join Peace Corps, but if they do, they'll be eligible for more programs," Lauffer said.

People can work for the Peace Corps shortly after graduation, but they need to apply early.

"As a general rule of thumb, they should start thinking of applying 10 to 12 months before the time they want to leave," Lauffer said.

To apply, students can pick up an application in 306-A Nelson, the Peace Corps recruiter's office.

Joining Peace Corps requires a 27 month commitment. The first three months are spent on language, technical and cultural training. Volunteers are not confined to their assigned location for the remaining two year commitment, though.

"They can take vacations when they want, but they have to pay," Lauffer said. Peace Corps pays for volunteers' health costs and housing.

"There's no program cost for volunteers," Lauffer said.

 on computers, Haller said the department has no immediate long-term plans to eliminate the handwritten word in Tompkins Hall.

"The interfaces aren't set up for long-term papers. Given the way current technology is, it isn't useful for long documents," she said. "The systems go down and security is a big issue that needs to be considered."

But the advantages of the Internet outweighs the problems of the computer labs, Schrag said. By installing the new system, he has been able to free more classroom time for teaching, instead of spending time going over syllabus changes.

Sign-ups for the lottery for ACC tournament tickets will be held Tuesday from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. at the Reynolds Coliseum Box Office.

The lottery will determine who will get the 100 ticket books available for students.

To register, students need to bring only their student I.D. card.

The results of the lottery will be posted Wednesday, and the winners will need to pay $160 per book by Friday.

Junior Christi Newton and sophomore Elizabeth Bernstein led the N.C. State women's gymnastic team to second place in the Hearts Invitational meet.

The duo took third and fourth place, respectively, in the all-around competition.

Despite their efforts, State could not pass the University of Nebraska, which won the meet with a score of 192.575. State scored 189.700 to beat James Madison and the University of Rhode Island. James Madison and Rhode Island finished third and fourth with scores of 184.675 and 184.025 respectively.

"We have all the skills that it takes to be one of the best teams in the country."

rotation 48.7 to 47.625 but could not hold on to the lead.

Stevenson credited Nebraska for its performance.

"Nebraska had a great meet," he said. "They have a very high-quality program."

However, Stevenson was encouraged by Bernstein's performance.

"Liz did an outstanding job," he said. "She is going to be one of our best athletes for the next couple of years."

Bernstein's best performance was on the vault where she took third place. Newton edged her out for third place in all-around 38.775 to 38.625.

As the Wolfpack wrestlers continue down the road to the ACC tournament, they're making some important pit stops along the way.

They braked this weekend to defeat Clemson 25-12 and overcome the slump of the upper weights.

Heavyweight Steve Hawk not only overcame a victory drought, but also a high school memory.

The Pennsylvania native beat Clemson's Matt Kim 8-4. Both had earned trips to Pennsylvania's state tournament while in high school, and Hawk was reminded of Kim's success.

"I had a goal," Hawk said. "I placed third in high school one year, and he placed second in state's (tournament). I really had a grievance against him."

Hawk gained vengeance. He knew he was a better wrestler. Kim had simply gotten a lucky break by being put in a lower bracket.

"There wasn't anybody on the lower bracket, so he just cruised through," Hawk said. "I knew I could beat the kid. I just wanted a chance to prove it."

Hawk's performance was the best example of the turnaround in the upper weights. While he had an extra boost of desire from the past, the rest of State's team was driven by thoughts of the near future and the conference tournament.

"As a team we're coming on strong at the end when we really need it," junior Ken Johnson said. "We all decided as a team that we had to turn it up a notch. Dual-meet season is important, but the only thing that really matters is the ACC tournament, and we're all gearing up for that."

The team has two more regular season matches, but has a set focus on the tournament. Redshirt freshman Kevin Farnham believes the team's success has a lot to do with intensity, and that it's one of the things the team has improved on throughout the course of the season.

"At the beginning of the season we weren't wrestling really intensely," Farnham said. "Now we're getting a lot more intense."

"Everyone is starting to win more and more and hopefully that will go through the ACC's."

The increased intensity was apparent against the Tigers. Mike Miller, Ryan Nunamaker, and Johnson all wrestled dominating matches.

With 49 seconds left in the third period of the 118-pound competition, Miller pinned Tim Nininger for a 15-3 win. Nunamaker controlled the 134-pound contest to beat Jamie Bankert 15-6.

A few of the Tigers tried to scratch back at State's attack, but Johnson cushioned the lead with a 13-6 victory in the 167-pound class over Derek Strobel.

State coach Bob Guzzo looks at everything coming together like pieces of a puzzle, and with the tournament around the corner, the picture is almost complete.

"Some of the things we've been working on are starting to occur out there on the mat," Guzzo said. "Our heavier weights are starting to do a little better now. We have two matches to go and I think we'll end up strong."

"The ACC tournament is what this all is in preparation for. The whole thing breaks down to the ACC tournament, and we're looking good and improving."

Holding a 7-6-1 record overall and 2-3 in the conference, the team travels to Annapolis to take on Navy Feb. 18, and wraps up the regular season with Duke at home Feb. 21 at 7:30.

shot a combined 11-14 from behind the arc. Howard finished with 25 and Gibson netted 22.

Florida State was able to put together a run in the second half. The Wolfpack's 18-point lead with 12:05 left was cut to five at 56-51 with 6:30 left.

But a pair of threes by Tammy Gibson quickly ballooned the lead back to 11 and one more with 1:21 left effectively slammed the door on the Seminoles.

State returns home for their final homestand of the season. Thursday night they host Georgia Tech at 7:00 and Sunday North Carolina pays a visit at noon.

Nebraska's Shelley Bartlett and Joy Taylor shared the all-around title with a score of 38.900.

Newton won the floor exercise, took second on the balance beam, and came in second in the vault despite having strep throat. The sophomore practiced only once this week. Her 9.925 on the vault was a personal best and was topped only by a perfect 10 by Erica Allocco of Rhode Island.

"She had very good performance," Stevenson said, "considering what she had to deal with this week."

Stevenson was pleased with the team's performance in the floor exercise. The Pack grabbed the top two spots. Newton beat out teammate Rosann Grabner by .05 points for first place.

Stevenson was excited about the team's continued success on the vault. State took second and third in the vault and turned in the best team performance.

"We are doing some killer vaulting," he said. "The team is aggressive on the vault."

Stevenson wants the team to expand its success from the vault into the other events.

"The team has to be as aggressive in the other events as they are in vaulting," he said.

Stevenson pointed to the team's need to improve on its consistency.

"We have to do the same thing in the meet as we do in practice," he said. "When you hit a routine in practice consistently then you should be able hit them in the meet."

"We have all the skills that it takes to be one of the best teams in the country."

State will host Eastern Michigan next on Sunday at 2 p.m.

Finally, answers to your relationship questions

ROGER DOELEMEN/STAFF

Submitted for your approval ... "The Dating Zone."

By CHRISTY HARDEN
STAFF WRITER

For the past month and a half, hearts and cupid's in shades of red, white and pink have dominated store display windows. Now the day of reckoning is almost here — Valentine's Day is tomorrow, and you can't stop the romantic holiday from coming.

If you're single, it can be one of the most depressing days of the year. Those in new relationships are probably racking their brains to find the perfect, but non-threatening, gift and card. And those few in relationships that have lasted more than a few months may be wondering how to keep their relationships going strong. Enter "The Dating Zone."

Sponsored by the Center for Health Directions (CHD), this interactive program won't help you pick the perfect Valentine, or even the perfect Valentine's gift. Instead, it covers the ins and outs of dating.

Topics range from the advantages of being single to how to break up. Many students feel pressure from friends, family and society in general to be involved with someone.

"I'm really concerned about college students, they feel pressured to be in a relationship," said Jennifer Phillips, a health educator at the CHD.

She said many students feel that they have to find their mate or true love in college. However, some students may not have the time, energy or emotional readiness to be in a relationship.

The first topic of "The Dating Zone" is the advantages of being single.

"I think students need to know that it's OK to be single, and that there are advantages to being single," Phillips said.

One advantage is saving money — you don't have to spend megabucks on movies, gifts and eating out. No heartaches, headaches or crying your eyes out either.

For those who are looking for that someone special, flirting is called upon.

"[The program] goes into flirting and exactly how you do that," Phillips said.

Being friendly, smiling and making eye contact are three important first steps, Phillips said that anyone can learn how to flirt.

"People think that lovers are born, when really lovers are made," she said.

Tired of dinner and a movie? Participants are asked to come up with creative date ideas when all they have is three dollars, no car and their meal plan. Some responses: a picnic in Pullen Park, window shopping in Cameron Village, taking a trolley ride downtown and sharing an ice cream cone. A list of 135 creative date ideas is available at the end of the session.

Communication is also covered. How to make your expectations and feelings clear are just two topics that are discussed. Phillips said that open and honest communication is the most important aspect of a relationship, but "that's a real problem for people." After flirting, going on creative dates and communicating, the next step is breaking up. "The Dating Zone" covers the best ways to break up and whether or not exes can remain friends.

"Many students don't know how to break up in a respectful way," Phillips said.

Each program is performed by two student volunteers, around 30 students are trained to lead "The Dating Zone." The program is requested by residence halls and other campus groups. Most N.C. State residence halls had already signed up the program by early February.

"The response on it has been very good," Phillips said. "I'm really happy with the response it's gotten."

Last year, the center's dating program was "Let's Talk About Sex." In a talk-show format, group members performed short skits, and audience members asked questions. The program was only presented once.

Phillips decided a different approach was in order this year. Instead of performing just one show, the program is available several times. "The Dating Zone" is more interactive and has participants work together to come up with dating advice.

The new program features ideas from staff members, Phillips and students.

To request "The Dating Zone," call the Center for Health Directions at 515-WELL or 515-2563. Two weeks advance notice is required. The center also offers other programs on alcohol, sexuality, nutrition and stress.

Movies to mope (or hope) by Alone again on Valentine's Day? Trash your pride and celebrate being single with a few well-chosen videos.

By CLARENCE MOYE
ASSISTANT ET CETERA EDITOR

If you're like most lonely, single people, you'll be browsing the video store looking for decidedly unromantic flicks to watch this Valentine's Day.

Gosh, how pathetic that sounds. At home, watching movies on Valentine's Day.

But don't bother to hide your face. Take some pride in the fact that you're single, and rent some movies that explore the darker side of love.

Lock up the rabbit, put away the knives, and start out with "Fatal Attraction," the movie that makes it painfully clear why you shouldn't go bar hopping for a date.

Glen Close and Michael Douglas experience a relationship based purely on sex: sex in the kitchen, sex in the elevator and sex in other imaginative places.

But if the idea of a couple frequently having great sex depresses you, rent "Halloween."

"But wait," you might say. "That's the wrong holiday."

Not really. "Halloween" is a great horror movie to watch alone in the dark. And there's an added bonus. Practically everyone who dies in the film has just had sexual intercourse.

Stella brushes up on her technique in this scene from "Love at Large" (Has anyone seen this?).

It's a morality movie. Teens have sex, they must die. For further exploration of that message, try the first "Friday the 13th," but it's not as good.

Then, try "War of the Roses," a hilarious look at what happens with two people who love each other but can't live with each other.

One of the best scenes in the movie is when Kathleen Turner asks to see Michael Douglas's "bald avenger" and then bites it.

But you can see a pattern developing here.

Love is painful, and Valentine's Day just rubs salt in the wound.

But if by some miracle you're not alone on Valentine's Day, go out on a limb and rent "Love at Large."

It's probably a really dumb and pointless movie, but then again if you have a date, why are you watching movies?

Turn off the VCR and get busy people!

Valentine's is for dreamers

Keith Crawford

Realism 101: This holiday is a commercial enterprise.

Valentine's Day, the national celebration of sickeningly sweet love, is here. Like a chronic case of heartburn, Valentine's Day keeps coming back, making us thankful February is a short month.

No, I don't have anything against love and romance. I do have a problem with a commercial celebration that has cheapened love — something that makes us all human. Valentine's Day is great for people who delude themselves. But if you're a realist, Valentine's Day causes more annoyance than it's worth.

Like those construction paper hearts. Enough. I took high school biology. And that ain't a heart. The only thing romantic about a real heart is that if it stops beating, you can't love anymore.

As romantic as that heap of bloody cardiac muscle is, you can't enter a store anywhere in the nation without seeing paper representations of what we mistakenly call a heart.

And where's Cardiac Central? The Hallmark store. Hallmark has been transformed into red, pink and white cuteness. Dangerously misconstrued as "festive," the headquarters of seasonal cuteness houses thousands of fancy cards exclusively for this darkest of days.

Things sure have changed since kindergarten, when Valentine's Day was egalitarian. I remember giving a Valentine and a piece of candy to everyone in the class — including the teacher. There was no sentiment involved in the exchange of cards then, just the competition to have the coolest and largest collection of Valentines in your class.

Some things haven't changed, though. Valentine's Day is as commercial as it always was, but with a higher cost. With the price of a dozen roses approaching the price of a month's rent, thankfully the giving is more exclusive.

Now, realists have entered a war of the roses against this despicable holiday and the heathen Cupid. Those in love (or lust — whichever the case may be) are pitted against the wiser, more realistic segment of the population. The realist in all of us wants to choke those cute love-struck types.

Why won't someone lead the charge? Boyfriends and girlfriends sneak around behind each other's backs, spending too much money on useless gifts they can't afford. If money is not an object, the question of propriety comes into light.

You don't want to spend too much, or your Valentine might get the wrong idea. Wedding bells could begin to ring in your significant other's mind. Too little and you're a cheapskate. You might end up sleeping on the couch.

As a result, shopping bags full of Valentine's presents seem to be everywhere. In some people's eyes, this is a contest of who gets the bestest and the mostest presents.

The winner and uncontested champion is usually the most conspicuous. Commercial "love" spreads like a social disease in a brothel around Valentine's Day. This has got to stop. Last time I checked, real love does not have Hallmark written all over it.

NCSU English department sponsors poetry contest

If you wax poetic this Valentine's Day, it could pay off.

ET CETERA STAFF REPORT

If you enjoy writing poetry, then why not try submitting some of your work to the poetry contest sponsored by the English Department? The annual Guy Owen/Tom Walters Poetry Festival Contest offers $100 for the best poem entered.

The contest is open to all N.C. State students as well as all North Carolina residents. Any amateur — one who has not published a full length volume of stories, including limited editions — who falls into one of the categories above is eligible to enter poems. The deadline is March 3, 1995.

The poets may enter no more than three poems. The total should not exceed 10 double-spaced, typed pages. Contestants should submit two copies of each poem and one typed cover sheet with name, address, telephone number and titles of submitted poems. The author's name should not appear anywhere on the manuscript.

And don't worry, there are no costs associated with this contest.

Entries will not be returned, so contestants are advised to keep copies of the poems.

Members of the NCSU English Department are not eligible.

Linda Pastan, author of "The Imperfect Paradise," will judge the entries. The winner must be available to read his or her poem at the festival Tuesday, March 28, when Pastan will introduce the winner.

Entries can be submitted to Angela Davis-Gardner, Poetry Festival, English Department, Box 8105, NCSU, Raleigh, N.C. 27695-8105.

Admission to the festival is free to the public on presentation of an original poem, or a favorite by someone else. Copies of these poems will be displayed on the festival's "Wall of Poetry."

A paper that is entirely the product of the student body becomes at once the official organ through which the thoughts, the activity and in fact the very life of the campus are registered. College life without its journal is a blank.

Watch out: They're at it again

■ The Board of Trustees is preparing to snub the civil rights of N.C. State students.

Revisions to the Code of Student Conduct could not only result in students being unfairly charged on the basis of suspicion but lack the consistency that is the hallmark of any effectively enforceable policy.

The Board of Trustees is likely to vote on them in March. Meanwhile, student senators are vehemently protesting what appears to be the most unethical and self-serving policy the university has ever considered.

Self-serving because its only purpose is to beat students into a mold of what the university sees as "good conduct." Unethical because the university would be able to charge students with the same crime as civil authorities.

The part of the code under scrutiny reads, "While a criminal charge does not mean the student is guilty of an offense, such a charge does mean that civil authorities have determined that there is at least probable cause to believe that an offense was committed, and that the student committed it."

This amending of the code would allow the university to pursue disciplinary action for a student who is arrested before he is actually granted a hearing and tried for the crime by civil authorities. This violates the ideal of being innocent until proven guilty.

The revision to the code would also make it possible for the university to pick which actions would invoke the disciplinary process for Code violations which happen off-campus.

The proposed code is too vague to be valid. The code needs to specify which actions the university considers serious enough to merit disciplinary action.

Paul Cousins, author of the code changes, insists the type of "exhaustive descriptors" don't exist at any other university. That doesn't mean NCSU should follow the example of other universities in making a vague, unethical and self-serving code.

Career scarred by hasty exit

■ A long, persistent basketball career at N.C. State has ended in a cloud of silence and suspicion.

The student body may never know why Bryant Feggins, an N.C. State forward, was suspended earlier this week. The surprising suspension of Feggins is exacerbated by the silence of Coach Les Robinson, Chancellor Larry Monteith and university level counsel Becky French — and by Feggins' recent contributions to an improving Wolfpack basketball team.

No one can deny that Feggins contributed greatly to the Wolfpack. His story says a lot about persistence.

On the second day of his junior year, Feggins suffered a knee injury and lost the chance to play the entire season. But before his knee could completely heal, Feggins got in an argument at North Carolina A & T State University that ended with a gun shot wound to his shoulder. Feggins lost another season as he dealt with nerve damage.

After appealing to the NCAA for two more years of eligibility, Feggins started for the Wolfpack. He averaged 8.3 points and 4.6 rebounds per game.

Now, with virtually no comment from the administration, Feggins is suspended. He'll probably never play for the Wolfpack again. Feggins is slated to graduate in June.

Perhaps Robinson described the situation best: "Considering what he's been through, he's a lucky young man to be able to go to college and get his degree. Although this is an immediate disappointment, in the long range he can come out in great shape."

Valentine's a day for creativity

■ Don't forget the chocolates tomorrow.

When it comes to Valentine's Day, and the annual female frustration with the male's lack of originality, it seems a bit ironic that the holiday's namesake was, well, male.

St. Valentine, a Roman martyr, probably wasn't thinking of little hearts and cupids in his last moments. But everyone knows this much — he died for something important to him.

Women are reportedly important to men, so maybe the female frustration comes from the male's biological aversion to details and creativity.

Maybe not. But as stereotypical as it sounds, the male usually doesn't seem to have the proclivity for make-heart-melt Valentine's Day gifts.

Flowers, chocolates, balloons — they're trite, but they're something. Guys can certainly win points if they realize one thing: What they off-handedly purchase for Mother's Day probably doesn't swing it with the sweetheart. It doesn't hurt to ask your friendly Hallmark clerks for a little help.

Tomorrow, fellows, do something in the true spirit of St. Valentine. Make her feel like you'd die for her.

Commentary

Benefits for SWC should apply to everyone

This past weekend, I grabbed my sleeping bag, long underwear, tent and 13 of my closest friends to camp out for Duke and Florida State basketball tickets. I am one of the students playing cards, listening to music, getting frost bite and discovering what it means to have school spirit.

A number of students are not camping out in the frigid February weather but will still have midcourt priority seating for these two games. These students do not have amazing grade point averages and have not won any awards, they are simply members of the Student Wolfpack Club.

The SWC is a campus organization dedicated to giving lazy students access to the most coveted student seating in Reynolds Coliseum for a financial contribution. This is not the official mission statement of the organization. My comments, however, are an accurate description of the outward appearance the SWC presents to the NCSU population. The actual purpose of the SWC is vague.

The SWC recruitment brochure claims that it is a student run organization for students interested in athletics at NCSU. In addition to the midcourt priority seating member benefits include a club tee shirt (ticket to the game), road trips (spirit bus), the Wolfpack newsletter (What's new in the SWC), a hospitality room at all ACC basketball games (free food and drinks), and UNC and Duke basketball tickets (contingent upon club involvement).

The "club involvement" aspect caught my attention. To be considered worthy enough not to camp out for tickets, a member must attend five non-revenue sporting events. A non-revenue sporting event is any NCSU sport but football or basketball.

If I played a sport, I would want fans to cheer me on who were interested in my abilities as an athlete instead of my ability to get them great seats at a basketball game.

Many students attend five non-revenue sporting events and because they are not members of the SWC, they do not receive priority seating at basketball games. Unfortunately, there will be no hospitality tent for these fans to go visit during the night while they are camping out for tickets.

The SWC requires that you pay a twenty-five dollar membership fee. In terms of a college budget, this means I could pay my electric bill or join the SWC. I vote to heat my house for a month.

I now pay $7,000 a year in out-of-state tuition to have the opportunity to stand in line. Sixty of these dollars are allocated directly to the athletic department. I believe that I have already paid enough money to receive all the benefits that this university can offer.

It is not the athletic department that sponsors the SWC. The Wolfpack Club holds the reins of the SWC.

The Wolfpack Club feels that when SWC members graduate from NCSU they will become members of their organization.

A student begins building priority points in the Wolfpack Club while still a member of the SWC. Again, the purpose of the SWC has little to do with school spirit and a lot to do with money.

Instead of more students falling prey to the SWC, I suggest the Wolfpack Club in coordination with the university, discontinue the SWC as it currently exists.

I am not advocating the SWC be denied their ability to be a club. Rather, the SWC should not receive student seating priorities because of the Wolfpack Clubs recruitment strategies.

The SWC members need to stop being lazy, stand in line, camp out and discover what it means to be a quality fan of the NC State Wolfpack.

I am thankful for the dedication of individuals who are camping out and will be cheering on the Wolfpack through good times and bad. The loyal, true fans are the ones who keep the enthusiasm inside Reynolds Coliseum alive.

Erin Rooney is a junior majoring in sociology.

'K' in Afrika signifies freedom of language

There seems to be some misunderstanding about why the Nubian Message (N.C. State's black-oriented Newspaper) spells the name of the ancestral home of blacks with a "K" instead of the traditional "C."

The Nubian Message gives several reasons for the unconventional spelling of the continent's name.

Contrary to what many critics have assumed and espoused, those who spell Africa with a "K" are well aware that Africa was the Latin name for the continent, given it by white Europeans. They are also aware that both "C" and "K" are a part of the Roman alphabet, which is not by any measure African. Hence, the purpose for the "K" is not to expunge the European influence from what we all know started out as a European name.

However, since European languages were first written and spoken in Africa, the spelling "Afrika" has been the spelling used by farming people and villagers throughout the continent.

By using "Afrika," the Nubian Message is recognizing the validity of the spelling given to the continent by those people who are a part of Africa.

Therefore, it is only in a part protest against the Europeanization of Africa. It is in much larger part a realization that even though the language of the paper is English, there is an African influence and an African perspective which the paper seeks to contribute to the NCSU community.

To make this reasoning easier for white Americans to understand, a comparison can be made to British and American English. Suppose that a small group of Americans lived in a community where there was an overwhelming and often oppressive British majority. Suppose in this society the British majority constantly berated and belittled American culture and the lifestyle of the American people.

Suppose furthermore that the majority failed to recognize all that is good about American values and all that has been gained in the historical experience of the American people.

Now, suppose whenever Americans submitted anything for publication the spelling of words like color and labor were changed to "colour" and "labour."

The Americans in the community would naturally resent that their traditional spelling was not only not used by the British, but the writing of the Americans was changed in order to spell the words in the decidedly "correct" British way.

In a climate of oppression and injustice, such a seemingly small and insignificant distinction could become a very important way in which Americans take pride in their own community and resist the British spelling.

The fact that English is a British language, first spoken by British people, makes no difference to Americans who are non-British, but still speak and write the language as their mother tongue.

The spelling of "color" would therefore take on a significance not just as a protest against the British domination, but also as a way of saying Americans are people too, this is our language too, and we have a right to use it as we please.

This is essentially the function which "Afrika" serves for the Nubian Message. If there can be an American-English and an Australian-English then why not an African-English. It is arrogant to assume that all of us, white or otherwise, use the language as it was originally devised by the British.

All of us are familiar with the language as we have come to know and use it in our own lives. We use it in a way that is appropriate to our culture and experience.

If blacks at NCSU and on the African continent want to spell the name of their continent in a vernacular which is appropriate to their history of speaking and writing, they should be supported and understood.
