National politicians take a road trip to N.C. State

10 years of famous faces

The annual event has been bringing leaders to campus since 1985.

This year's Emerging Issues Forum, "Conflict, Competition, Cooperation: Power Politics in a Changing World," was the event's tenth anniversary. The two-day forum, held in the McKimmon Center, focused on national and economic security and America's changing role in global politics.

Governor Jim Hunt said changes in trade and communications have made the world a different place.

International leaders like U.S. Senator Sam Nunn, United Nations Ambassador Madeleine Albright, U.S. trade representative Mickey Kantor, Common Cause founder John Gardner and former Secretary of State Lawrence Eagleburger spoke at the conference.

"We have another distinguished roster of speakers," Hunt said. "I want us to have a lively, provocative discussion."

National leaders are nothing new to the forum. Over the past decade, prominent public figures like Jimmy Carter, Ross Perot, Bill Clinton, Al Gore, Michael Dukakis and Carl Sagan have all made appearances there.

"Sooner or later it seems the influential people in the nation are with us for this forum," said C.D. Spangler, president of the UNC System.

"We've truly had a decade of dialogue," Hunt said.

N.C. State started the forum in 1985 to bring together state and national leaders to discuss important issues in America and the world. Hunt is the founding chairman and host of the forum.

"Each year I've left this forum wiser than when I entered the hall," said Chancellor Larry Monteith.

N.C. State representative to the United Nations Madeleine Albright, who made her second appearance at the forum Monday afternoon, also had good things to say about the event.

"Events that truly educate are rare," she said. "The forum is one of them."

A gala celebration was held Monday evening at the N.C. Museum of Art in commemoration of the event's tenth anniversary.

The Cold War may be over, but the new battle for national security is just beginning.

That was the message from Georgia Senator Sam Nunn, who spoke Monday morning at the Emerging Issues Forum. The United States must be prepared to change for the new threat, he said.

"There's a great deal to think about when you wake up and find you're the only superpower," Nunn said. "It has its benefits, but it has great burdens."

The high-risk period of the Cold War, when a regional conflict could erupt into armageddon, is over. That threat gave the world stability.

"Today we have almost the opposite of that," he said. "We're in a different kind of world."

One of the key issues America has faced since the end of the Cold War, and one it will continue to face, is military assistance to other countries, Nunn said. There is a temptation every time we see a tragedy on CNN to send military assistance.

America has to choose its military engagements carefully, he said, examining each case to determine if it is a humanitarian, vital or important military mission.

"Our allies have to understand we're not going to send military forces everywhere there's a problem," he said. "We can't be involved on the ground everywhere."

Nunn said when America decides to send forces overseas, it must clearly define the mission and send in enough forces to decisively achieve the objective. The military should not have to escalate its forces to be effective, he said.

Nunn stressed that areas like the Middle East will have to find ways to partially defend themselves from dictators like Saddam Hussein. America can be a residual power, but it must not be the sole salvation, he said.

"We should not be the first line of defense in the Middle East from now on," Nunn said.

America can also use the United Nations while conducting diplomacy, he said, echoing U.N. Ambassador Madeleine Albright's speech given earlier Monday morning.

"The key is understanding what the U.N. can do, and what it can't do," he said. "It does a pretty darn

The term "bully pulpit" may be associated with presidents, but Madeleine Albright proved ambassadors also understand the concept. The U.S. representative to the United Nations was supposed to speak on "Power Politics in a Changing World." Instead, she used her allotted time at Monday's Emerging Issues Forum to defend America's involvement in the United Nations.

She said the United Nations is under fire from some American politicians who say it is ineffective and not worth the money America puts into it.

"It has become an easy scapegoat in a messy world," Albright said.

The United Nations can't solve all the world's problems, Albright said, but it is a valuable tool for America's foreign policy.

America cannot pursue an isolationist policy because we accept all risks and costs when countries act unilaterally, she said.

"International cooperation has become a necessity," Albright said. "Progress for America is not possible in this time unless we work with others."

The United States must work with others, she said, but must also be cautious about doing too much.

"We must navigate a path between disengagement and overextension,"

Telephone book recycling centers open in Wake county

Seventeen trees are saved for every ton of recycled paper.

If Wake County environmentalists have their way, the phone book you are using now will become the newspaper you read tomorrow.

Today marks the beginning of Wake County's annual phone book recycling program. The program, sponsored jointly by Wake County Solid Waste Management and Southern Bell, runs through March 31. There are no other phone book recycling programs in Wake County.

"This is a one-shot deal," said Linda Fuller, a solid waste education specialist for Wake County. "You either do it now, or N.C. State is one of 20 drop-off sites around Wake County. Students may take phone books to the bin on campus, located near the Physical Plant's wash area.

Last year, NCSU students, faculty and staff recycled 13.33 tons of used phone books. That number was less than the previous year's total of 14.52 tons.

Fuller said she believes the Obscure, classic movies showcased in festival

February is Black History Month, and in celebration the African American Cultural Center and the Encore Center for Lifelong Enrichment are presenting a series of classic movies featuring favorite black entertainers such as Lena Horn, Cab Calloway and Bill "Bojangles" Robinson.

Organizers selected movies from the '30s and '40s to depict what black life was like during that time.

"This is a good opportunity to see what these early movies represented — to see what movie producers

Moses also said many of the movies in the program are not shown on network television.

The next film in the series is "Cabin in the Sky," which will be showing today. This 1943 movie is about representatives from heaven and hell who fight for a man's soul.

number fell because people did not know where to put the phone books. But she said she hopes this year will be different.

"We'd like to get 100 percent participation," said Tonya Bullock, the NCSU Physical Plant representative working with the program. "We'd like to double last year's participation."

Of the 20 available drop-off sites, Fuller said Athens Drive High School, the N.C. State Fairgrounds and the Jaycee Park are alternative locations close to campus.

"Convenience is the name of the game where recycling is concerned," she said.

Once the bins are full, Southern Bell pays the costs for shipping the used phone books to Bowater Recycling Plant in Calhoun, Tennessee. Roughly 40 percent of recycled paper goes into the newspaper market. And the number of uses for recycled paper is growing every year.

In addition to reducing waste, recycling helps the environment. "Seventeen trees are saved for every ton of recycled paper," Fuller said.

The program is in its sixth year, but Fuller said only a fourth of the total number of used phone books are being recycled. The remaining books either get thrown away or end up sitting around being unused.

Fuller said she knows that some absent-minded professors have a stack of five or six old phone books in their offices.

Fuller said people need to recycle their old phone books now before they forget.

"People think that six weeks is a long time, but it will be over before we know it, and then those who forget again will be stuck until next year," she said.

Foreign policy situations involving sanctions, like those in place on Iraq and Libya, are examples of when the United Nations is an important tool for America, she said.

"You often need international support for a policy we want," Albright said. "There is no way for the United States to sanction a regime alone."

The United Nations is a good supplement when we want others to share the load and carry the risk, she said. She cited the available military and financial assistance other countries can give when necessary.

"When we weaken the U.N., we only weaken ourselves," she said.

Albright expressed particular concern with two separate House and Senate bills which would withdraw U.S. support from the United Nations.

"We will do much less of the heavy lifting," she said.

Albright said the financial cost America incurs by being a U.N. member is minimal. The annual cost is about $7 per capita.

"The U.S. is reimbursed more than any single country at the U.N.," she said.

Despite the two congressional bills, Albright said she doubts the American public wants to withdraw from the United Nations.

"At all polling data I have seen, the U.N. is very popular," she said.

If the bill does pass, Albright said she will ask the president to veto it.

This is the 50th anniversary of the United Nations, which was created at the end of World War II. The international organization has grown from 50 charter countries to the 185 member states it has today.

good job in what we call peace-keeping. [But] the U.N. is not good at peace-making. The U.N. should be very, very cautious about war fighting."

Nunn said the biggest problem facing America was the availability of weapons of mass destruction.

"Preventing proliferation is the most vital thing in the next several years," he said. "No generation has ever faced the kind of proliferation we have."

So far, America has convinced several of the smaller countries that were formed after the break-up of the Soviet Union to give up their stockpiles of nuclear weapons. And 27,000 warheads were removed from the former Soviet Union's bombers and missiles.

Nunn said the foreign aid costs of the project outweigh the benefits in the long run.

"If we can spend a few billion dollars getting rid of them, it would be a direct contribution to our national security," he said.

Both films will be shown from 3 to 5:30 p.m. free of charge. The time was chosen so that students could come, along with the seniors involved with the Encore Program. Moses said. This program was created to teach a series of courses for retired people including film and financial marketing.

The films will be introduced by Barry Silverstein, who is a film collector and expert. A different guest will speak to the audience after each week's showing.

Camp out: a college event

■ For dedicated Wolfpack fans, getting tickets for the big game can be half the fun—if you know when the Camp out begins.

By ANNA MARSHALL
 STAFF WRITER

What are students willing to do for the best seats in the house? They're willing to spend a night out in the cold. They're willing to sleep on the ground. They're even willing to sit by the radio until WNCN tells them it's time for camp out.

Not that everyone knows to do that last part. Even though there is only one more game students can get tickets for, there is still some confusion about just how camp out works. N.C. State's Student Senate sets the policy for student tickets each year. Jonathan Bost, co-chair of the Senate's Student Life Committee, explained that camp out is called no more than 60 hours, but no less than 24 before Monday 7 a.m. distribution of tickets. The campus radio station, WNCN-FM, 88.1, announces camp out and the Senate allows 30 minutes for people to gather friends and supplies. Tash Warren, a junior in landscape horticulture, said she has been going to State for four years, and had to sleep outside for tickets at least once. But she still wasn't sure where the line formed. "This is my fourth year here and I had no clue how it worked or that they called camp out," she said. The announcement is made so students won't camp out for the. But some students don't listen to

Rugby — not just for men anymore

There's a new sport for women on campus this year: Rugby. Yes, rugby. The full-contact, non-paddling sport that probably donates more blood than N.C. State's Red Cross drives. This is the first year women's rugby has existed at N.C. State, thanks to team captain and sophomore Maureen McIntyre. McIntyre played at UNC-Wilmington last year, and when she came to NCSU she helped out with the men's team. After being asked and encouraged to start a women's team, she finally did last semester. "We didn't have a coach last semester and we had about 15 girls, and this year, we have about 30 girls and a coach," McIntyre said. McIntyre also is the president of the club, which is currently waiting for Student Government to approve its constitution. The team is also in the process of seeking admission to the Rugby Union, which will formally recognize them as a club. "It's looking good; this is the best semester," McIntyre said. "We've got games scheduled and a checking account — it's becoming more organized."

State peaking at the right time

■ After a disappointing regular season, the women's swim team is building towards a strong finish at the ACC Championships.

By MICHAEL TODD
 STAFF WRITER

After a lackluster season for the N.C. State women's swimming team, the ACC Championships is the time to pull together a season of hard work and show the rest of the conference what this team is really made of. The Wolfpack finished this season at 5-8 overall, including two one-point losses early in the season, and 1-5 in the ACC. The only conference win came against Duke. The Pack started the year out slowly with a record of 3-3, including a fifth-place finish at the ACC Relays. Then, they suffered through a two-month losing streak in the middle of the season. But two wins late in the season against Miami and UNC-Wilmington and a hard-fought loss versus North Carolina have given the Pack much-needed momentum going into the ACC Championships. State is a dark horse in the seven-team race for the conference title. But the team's expectations are not focused on a first-place ranking. "I think we will finish around fourth or fifth," coach Beth Harrel said. "I am pretty sure that we will beat Duke. With a good showing, a strong meet, I think that there is a possibility that we can beat Maryland." The chances of success for the Wolfpack rests on the shoulders of a handful of swimmers. Co-captain Deirdre Dilworth is expected to reach the finals in the 100-, 200-, and 500-meter freestyle events, while co-captain Kristi Kodak is ranked in the top eight in the 200-meter breaststroke, thanks to a great finish against Carolina. Allison Hardy could possibly take a conference title in either the 100- or 200-meter backstroke. She has also a chance to finish in the top eight in the 400-meter individual medley. The sprint freestyle events will be contested by Lea Delicio, Tammy Lyons, and Colleen Smith. Lyons holds the team's best time this year in the 50-meter freestyle and the second best in the 100-meter freestyle behind Dilworth. Delicio has overcome injury this year to post the second- and third-best times in the 50-meter and 100-meter freestyle respectively, while Smith holds the 50-meter freestyle's third best time. Each is expected to reach the finals in those events. Rachel Delia has been in the 200-meter butterfly top-10 for most of the year, while Betsy Baker will swim the mile for only the second time this year. But where State can really make a difference is in the diving events. State is undefeated in conference diving competition this year as the trio of Eileen Duley, Jane McGrath, and Kortney Schell have led the diving squad. "My best three divers have got a very good opportunity to make top eight," said diving coach John Candler. "If they just dive steady and do what they have been doing all season and don't panic or anything, they should be there. Any of the three could possibly win an ACC title." Success for the women's team is dependent on a good diving performance. "We're looking for a first, second, or third on the boards," Harrel said. "We figure that they will do extremely well, get a lot of points for us." The favorites for the ACC team title are defending champion Carolina and Virginia. The Tar Heels, ten-time conference champions, are led by last year's ACC Swimmer-of-the-Year Leslie Ramsey, who holds the ACC's top times in the 200-meter butterfly and the 1000-meter freestyle. Virginia counters with Nicole Rutkowski, the Most Valuable Swimmer of last year's championships. She won three individual titles last year.

To get ahead, run with the leader.

You should be proud of your college record. You saw a window of opportunity and you took advantage of it, with hard work, determination, and—finally—success. And your timing couldn't be better, because right now LSI Logic is poised for a similar opportunity—a perfect convergence of our new technologies and market demands.

A decade ago we pioneered ASIC technology—a semiconductor technology that allows electronics manufacturers to design their own integrated circuits. Since then, we've led the ASIC industry to another level—system-level integration. Our new technology allows our Designers to put a complete system on a single chip...and our 500K (1.5 million gate technology) process provides the means to manufacture it.

But we can't continue to lead the industry alone—and that's where you come in. Our success has created challenging engineering opportunities for you in the following areas:

Johnny Brennan and Kamal Ahmed play unemployed construction workers who make prank calls for fun.

Obnoxious duo goes from phones to film

■ "The Jerky Boys" hit the theaters with a big thud, leaving audiences wondering if someone had played a trick on them.

BY BRAD ANDERSON
STAFF WRITER

The Jerky Boys are a couple of amiable, entertaining, hysterical guys ... on cassette or CD. On film, they are a couple of bad acting, hairy slob who make Rasheed Wallace look like Denzel Washington.

This WOF (Waste Of Film) stars J o h n n y Brennan and A h m e d Kamal making their film debut playing themselves as "The Jerky Boys." Their recordings of prank phone calls began as underground comedy tapes and have emerged as two Gold albums, a nomination for a Best Comedy Album Grammy Award and, unfortunately, a movie.

The plot is based on a prank phone call made to the Mafia by Frank Rizzo, a character created by the Jerky Boys. The call is intercepted by the police, and one thing leads to another.

The Jerky Boys are then wanted by the police and the Mob. While calling their enemies names such as "sizzle chest," "sugar pants" and "hot lips" and posing as groupies, cabbies and magicians, they get out of their dilemma and save the day at the end.

Relax if this sounds too complicated. It may require more brain cells than a small stone to follow this story line. To put it in perspective, there is a scene where the Jerky Boys are tied to a chair in a room with a meat grinder that turns humans into hot dogs.

The next scene shows them climbing out a window with—you guessed it—a thirty foot strand of hot dogs. The director forgets to show the audience how they untied themselves or how they created their human hot dog rope, but that must not be important in this, uh, plot?

Siskel and Ebert probably left the theater at this point.
There are a few humorous scenes

Out-of-this-world gathering of obsessive 'Star Trek' fans

Kristen Keach

■ Searching for signs of intelligent life in Raleigh.

I admit it. I'm a trekkie. A good 80 percent of my television viewing consists of the four Star Trek series. And I have stacks of videotaped episodes of "The Next Generation" and "Deep Space Nine." I'm saving them in case of nuclear holocaust. I wouldn't want to be stuck in a bomb shelter without Captain Picard and Commander Data. I have a "Deep Space Nine" book, "Star Trek — The Game" and a communicator pin. I own a copy of "The Star Trek Encyclopedia," and I drink my tea from a USS Enterprise mug.

I thought I was hopeless until I attended my first Star Trek convention at the State Fairgrounds last Saturday.
The first thing I noticed about my fellow conventioners were the costumes. I have my favorite characters, but there is no way I would go out in public dressed like any of them. Except on Halloween. And these folks weren't fooling around either. They trooped into the Kerr Scott Building like followers of some weird religious cult. To say they take this stuff seriously would be an understatement.

Armin Shimerman, who plays Quark on "DS9," was answering some interesting questions about his experiences as an actor, then it got weird.
"Where is the Ferengi homeworld?" asked a Starfleet uniform-clad conventioner.
Hub? How is he supposed to know? He's not a real Ferengi! Because Ferengis aren't real!
"How many rules of acquisition are there?" asked another.
Shimerman handled the questions well, explaining that the writers hadn't told him where the Ferengi homeworld was and that it might come up in a future episode.

He did know the answer to the rules of acquisition question though. "Two hundred and eighty five" he said and quickly.
Tim Russ, who plays Tuvok, the Vulcan lieutenant on "Voyager," handled his fame questions with just as much charm and grace as Shimerman. It must be in their contracts.
One question that caught Russ off guard concerned Tuvok's name beginning with "T" while all the other Vulcan names begin with "S" (i.e. Spock, Sarek, Saavik, etc.). He stalled for time finally muttering something about different regions of Vulcan having names that started with different letters. I'm sure we'll hear more about that in a future episode.

During their talks, I kept waiting for one of the actors to snap. To suddenly yell "Would you people get a life!" like William Shatner did during that Saturday Night Live skit he got so much flak for.
But somehow they maintained their composure. And that's more than I can say for me.
At first it was easy to suppress the giggles, but when Russ said something about "that Vulcan mystique" I thought I would explode.

And what must Russ and Shimerman think of Raleigh? The convention was held on the same day as the Dixie Gun and Knife Classic and the ever-so-classy Fairgrounds Flea Market. Think they popped out for a funnel cake before the show?
I wonder if either of them noticed the stunning mural over their heads—the one featuring Richard Petty and some guy milking a cow.
As for the nifty merchandise, I

Technician

A paper that is entirely the product of the student body becomes at once the official organ through which the thoughts, the activity and in fact the very life of the campus are registered. College life without its journal is a blank.

Technician, vol. 1, no. 1, February 1, 1920

Practical knowledge - finally!

Knowledge of the Internet will help the N.C. State College of Humanities and Social Sciences graduate in the work-force.

N.C. State has become increasingly "logged-in" in the past few years. The university's computer and Internet facilities greatly overshadow UNC-Chapel Hill and Duke University as well as most other North Carolina schools. In recognition of such a trend, NCSU's professors have come to rely on e-mail as the best way of keeping in touch with students outside of the classroom.

E-mail is readily available to everyone. Every student on the N.C. State campus has a Unity account where he or she can read and send e-mail messages. A number of colleges on campus also have special labs and accounts for their students. Using e-mail, teachers can answer questions that require research, announce homework and paper assignments and give test dates. E-mail messages can be printed or saved on a disk. It is a permanent record of correspondence with professors.

In a world which runs on new technology, job applicants who are e-mail proficient are prized. Being literate in Internet and e-mail is similar to being knowledgeable about word processing ten years ago — those who adapted and learned, thrived. Those who did not, faltered.

NCSU is supposed to provide its students with an education. Learning to effectively use e-mail is just another way of doing so.

The next time your teacher says you can e-mail him or her, don't gripe. This is actually a piece of homework that will make you more valuable in today's job market.

Commentary

Fact, opinion and Overmier's toadies

I thought I had finally put the Overmier thing to bed, but some terribly misinformed persons associated with the marching band just won't let this thing rest.

A few of them called up editorial page editor, Josee Daoust, and griped for an hour about how Technician can't run negative stuff about the band because it will hurt the band.

Since I'm not so petty as to use real names in this instance, I'll call them Mr. Ranting and Mr. Raving.

Apparently reaching out and blustering this poor gal's ear wasn't enough for these two, so they came to Technician World Headquarters to argue some more. When they couldn't find Daoust, they let into the news editor.

Ranting and Raving even threatened to sue me and the paper for libel. Raving went so far as to say that yours truly is a bastard, on behalf of the marching band staff.

Although this may be an exercise in futility and a demonstration of my "self-righteousness," I will explain the responsibilities and functions of Technician and the opinion page so as to clear up the slobber of the ignorants.

A newspaper has the responsibility to print the truth, plain and simple. It is very difficult to misinterpret or ignore the State Auditor's findings on the disappearance and/or mishandling of $13,336. But there are two different parts to the Overmier story. One involves band members' and students' experiences with Overmier. Such issues are subjective and hard to report accurately without stepping on toes.

The other side involves money and the vanishing act of files accounting for that money. Such issues are objective, and there's only so many ways one can read into them.

It is ludicrous to say that printing the State Auditor's findings is somehow intentionally hurting the band. Ranting and Raving's Fergusonian argument on the news side of this issue is that Technician can't print the results from the auditor's report because the band's reputation would be soiled.

Alex Storey

I know that the band works hard, but the reputation of any band would be soiled when 13 grand has disappeared or been mismanaged and the director has shown himself to be a crazed authoritarian.

Having two of the marching band's staff members harangue Technician staffers in such a base and uncivil fashion doesn't help either.

In case this bit of wisdom has eluded some people, news and opinion are two separate things. News is a "report of recent events" as defined by Webster's New Collegiate Dictionary. The release of the special review of the music department is newsworthy, and whether it's good, bad or indifferent, Technician has an obligation to print it. The paper is not here to protect egos.

Opinion on the other hand is "a view, judgment, or appraisal formed in the mind about a particular matter" as defined by the aforementioned dictionary. Everything on the opinion page is, surprise, opinion.

Read the first paragraph at the bottom of the masthead (that's the box on the opinion page with all those names in it). Go ahead, I'm not going anywhere.

You now know that the opinions expressed in columns, cartoons and letters printed in Technician are the views of the individual writers and cartoonists. The editorials on the left side of the opinion page are Technician's opinions and are the responsibility of the editor-in-chief.

Therefore, if you don't like what I've said, bring it to me. Don't take it out on Daoust, as some others recently have. If you don't like Technician's news coverage, take it to the news editor, Ron Batcho. If you're going to bitch and moan, at least have the sense to direct it at the right person.

Or better yet, send in a Campus Forum letter. Send it in to Technician offices or e-mail it; the appropriate addresses are at the bottom of the front page.

There's no guarantee that the letter will run or that it will appear in its entirety. Heck, some of my columns get cut simply because they're too long.

Blatant factual errors in letters have been and always will be corrected at the discretion of the editorial page editor. This generally isn't necessary, as most letters have their facts straight, but every once in a while it is.

Concerning the issue of libel: good luck. It is damn hard to sue a columnist for libel.

The only way I could be sued for libel is if I deliberately wrote something I knew was false and presented it as factual. A columnist can say whatever he wants within reason and, in my seemingly "ignorant" and "self-righteous" opinion, I am well within my bounds.

Newspapers have an obligation to run the news, and just because somebody will look bad is no cause for a paper to renege on this commitment to its readers. Facts are facts, and to contest the reporting of said facts because they are somehow unsavory is evidence of a wishy-washy intellect and a vague sense of reality.

But what happens, and the paper must report on such events. Instead of taking the issue personally, especially when no one is impugning the character of the rank and file, band members should be angry with the music department and the Department of Student Affairs for allowing this administrative debauchery to go on.

The emperor defrocked himself. And as much as the ignorants with their blinders Fon don't want to hear it, I'm just pointing out that he has no clothes.

Alex Storey is a junior majoring in English. His email address is AlexS@smc.ncsu.edu.

Porn on net being liquidated

Keep those sleazy Shetland pony pictures to yourself!

Like most major universities of this size, N.C. State is on the Internet. A huge, teeming informational metropolis that can fit on your desktop, the Internet is accessible to most Americans and a vast population outside our borders.

But the greater the accessibility and usage, the greater the chance for abuse.

Because it is an open channel directly into your computer, the Internet is completely uncensored. And many readily available images are of so sexual a nature as to create an uncomfortable work environment for students researching papers in labs.

It's when the pictures are on public display — in NCSU buildings, on NCSU computer screens — that the university becomes involved. Specifically, a new NCSU policy prohibits display of certain types of photos, mostly nude, on lab monitors where others may be offended.

It's so easy to pull those images up that stopping the practice may prove impossible. But the school tries to police it as best it can.

The school's Unity and Eos accounts are for research and entertainment. Students should use the facilities, but they should not be used by students to download or post material that makes others feel uneasy.

The university's computing center has a herculean task ahead of it, one it may never complete. But it is good to know that they are actively trying to stop a practice that's simply wrong.

SWC is not just a country club

I am a member of the Student Wolfpack Club and I am offended by Erin Rooney's column (Feb. 13). It assumes that all members of the Student Wolfpack Club join just for the priority seating for basketball season.

That may be true, but a lot of the members joined because they are fans of N.C. State athletics. I am one of the latter. I felt joining SWC was a way to show support for the athletes of NCSU.

I have camped out for my share of basketball tickets, even though I could have gone to the game by using my membership to the SWC.

I have been to several non-revenue events and the student turnout was almost non-existent. The SWC is for these other sports.

Everyone will watch Wolfpack football or men's basketball. But when was the last time a group of people wanted to see a tennis match, wrestling match, volleyball match, or a swim meet.

The Campus FORUM

Not many people would. By going to these events in our T-shirts, we are showing those athletes that we appreciate their hard work and effort.

The athletes of the non-revenue sports spend just as much time practicing and preparing for their sports as do football and basketball players. The other athletes want students there to show them they do make a difference and that someone cares about their sport.

As for the issue of "The loyal, true fans are the ones who keep the enthusiasm inside Reynolds Coliseum alive," I have been to several games since with Johnny Brennan, like when he calls the hospital and discusses his hemorrhoids with a nurse, or when he calls the head of a powerful Mafia family a "fruity ass" on numerous occasions.

For the most part, the acting by Karim Ahmed and the rest of the cast should have been left on a high school stage where it belonged.

The spontaneity of the prank phone calls that made the tapes and CD's so popular was absent with the script and the obvious presence of cue cards. The audience was aware that the actors knew when they were going to receive a prank phone call, which takes away from the whole idea of a prank phone call in the first place.

The most unpredictable part of the whole movie was seeing "Tony Danza" and "Emilio Estevez" in credits as Executive Producers.

There are other big names such as William Hickey and Alan Arkin.

And I could see that a small cottage industry has sprung up around the study of the Klingon language. That's right. People with nothing better to do invented an entire language around a fictional race from a fictional planet.

You can now learn basic Klingon and then advance to conversational Klingon. If you're unsure of that tricky word or phrase you can consult your English to Klingon dictionary. I'll keep that in mind for the next time I have to address the high council.

On the way out, I thought I might try to get an autograph. Unfortunately about a thousand other people had the same idea.

I saw Russ sitting behind a folding table signing his name at an assembly line pace: sign, pass, sign, pass, sign, pass. Each lucky fan got about 2.5 seconds to bask in the glow.

Not worth it, I thought. Anyway, I had to get home in time for the new episode of Deep Space Nine.

was disappointed. The booths inside Kerr Scott had about as much class as the flea market booths outside.

The staff was obscenely overpriced, and there wasn't much that couldn't be found at the mall. The rare items either had that made-in-the-basement look or appeared to infringe on any number of copyright laws.

Camp out

WKNC and therefore don't know when to head for Reynolds.

"Instead of putting it on 88.1, it should be put on something that people can listen to or put it on TV," said Steve Shepherd, a sophomore in zoology.

That was the main complaint among students camping out for tickets to the Duke and Florida State games last weekend. Many students were miffed because they didn't know when to be there. And they felt they missed out on one of the highlights of college.

"This is what college basketball is all about," said freshman Jeff Page. "You see it on TV and it makes you want to do it and be part of this atmosphere."

"It should be more publicized, because people have a really good time out here," Lisa Stewart, a freshman in psychology and sociology, said. "They get to talk to and meet people, and then they all end up at the game together."

And after the time spent making new friends, the point of camp out rolls around and the masses begin to line up for tickets.

Senior Dean Vogt and crew were lucky enough to be first at window four.

"I've never been first in line and we're excited because these are going to be awesome seats," Vogt said. "If more people knew about camp out there would be a better turnout. I wish there were more people out here, so we could feel a little more special."
To pass the time all sorts of innovative games and ideas come to the campers. NCSU employee Steve LaRoca picked up the toilet paper that had been hoisted and hung from the trees by those bored in the wee hours Monday morning, but LaRoca didn't mind the mess.

"It doesn't bother me, and there's no damage," LaRoca said. "They're just having a good time."

Not only is it having a good time, but the campers get their tickets. Most are pleased with seats on the sidelines or front of the endzones. There is one more camp out, for the Georgia Tech game. Tickets will be distributed Feb. 20, so find a group of 14 or less, a tent, many warm clothes, and listen to WKNC that preceding weekend for the camp out announcement and your very own great seats.

Even though the club is organized, the game they play is often a frenzy.

Rugby is a combination of football and soccer. You can use your hands and feet, but you may not throw the ball forward.

Rugby is played with 15 people to a team on a 75-by-110-yard field. Players use neither padding nor equipment except for a mouthpiece. This lack of protection leaves players susceptible to injury.

"Rugby is the continuous play of sooner — it doesn't stop every time someone is tackled," rugby coach Chad Stahl said. "There are 40-minute halves, and there is very little stoppage."

Freshman newcomer to the sport Jennifer Johnson thought rugby sounded interesting and had no inhibitions about getting hurt.

"You don't really think about it," Johnson said. "Once you get tackled you just get back up, and you don't even feel it."

Chad Stahl stepped in this semester when the team was desperate for a coach.

"I used to play here at State; I've been playing for about six years," Stahl said. "They needed a coach, and due to injuries and surgery I can no longer play. So this was a nice way for me to stay involved."

The team practices on Tuesdays and Thursdays from 5:00 to 6:30 p.m. and on some weekends on the intramural fields. Right now, the team is mostly working on passing drills and getting the girls familiar with the game.

This spring, the women's rugby team will be playing Emory College, UNC-Chapel Hill and Guilford and at the State Tournament. The first game is Feb. 18 in Atlanta, but the first home game will be April 15 when NCSU hosts a tournament with three other teams. Admission is free.

If you would like to place a classified ad, please call us at 515-2029. Deadlines are:

Display Ads 2 issue dates in advance @ noon
 Line Items 1 issue date in advance @ noon

Display, or boxed ads are sold by the column inch (ci). A (ci) is one column wide and one inch high. Simply divide the size of your ad in column inches, and multiply the number of (ci) by the appropriate rate.

Line Item Rates are based on five (5) minutes per line regardless of length of word or abbreviation. Simply figure the number of lines in your ad, choose the number of days you wish to run the ad, and use the chart at the right to calculate the price. All line items must be prepaid. No exceptions.
