candidate Chad Norman says he wants to give all students a voice in Student Government.

By JENNY FRAZIER

Sophomore Chad Norman, a Sopnomore Chad Norman, a political science major, is basing his campaign for Student Senate president on making Student Government more accessible to students.

Norman, who has three semesters of experience in Student Government, said this year's Senate has done a good job. But, effected, he says he would make it more organized so the senators could do a more effective job. "If elected, I want to make sure veryone has an active voice in the Student Government," Norman said. "The senators need to be more accessible to their constituents, and the way to do that is to make sure senators more motivated and excited about their job."

Norman said it is important to Norman said it is important to fight for students' rights. He has created a Senate Legislative Relations Committee for lobbying state government about issues important to students.

"We have about a 27,000 person voting bloc here at State. We must also a message to our legislators that we will not tolerate cuts in higher education funding and tuition increases," Norman's campaign pamphlet says.

"Although school spirit and things like that are important, there are real issues that need to be addressed like academics and safety," Zimmer said.

Zimmer, who has one year of experience on the academic committee in the Student Senate, said the most important legislation Student Government has reviewed this year has been brought up by the academic committee.

"We have handled all the resolutions dealing with course repeat without penalty, the extension of the course drop period, the plus/minus grading and many others," Zimmer said. "I believe [Student Government] should focus on academics and other issues that are of serious concern to the students on this campus."

Zimmer said he knows the problems facing campus residents and has possible solutions because he is the only Student Senate president candidate who lives on campus.

"I want to propose that perhaps room rates should be based on square footage and location," Zimmer said. "In addition, we need

Forum focuses on forestry

Speakers met last weekend to discuss tree harvesting.

MICHAEL LEMANSKI

Production foresters don't consider the environmental and social costs that go along with clearcutting, said the ex-chair of the national forests subcommittee of the Sierra Club.

William Thomas, who spoke at a forum on the topic Saturday in the Witherspoon Student Center, said the pace of today's clearcutting makes the practice "like burning libraries of books that have never been read."

The forum, titled "Clearcutting: An Issue in Sustainable Development and Conservation." was organized by the International Society of Tropical Foresters (ISTF) About 100 environments, teachers and conservation."

(ISTF). About 100 environmentalists, teachers and students attended. Conventional estimates of clearcutting's damage are too low. Thomas vaid. Clearcutting is the practice of cutting down large blocks of trees for timber. "There are many environmental problems with clearcutting that cannot be put into the monetary terms that foresters and economiss place on land," he said. But according to Charlie Williams of Weyerhaeuser Company, a large logging firm, the logging industry is just doing what it has to do to keep up with demand. "[People] have to accept the responsibility that comes with their consumptive lifestyles," Williams said.

The aim of the conference was to "provide a balanced view where foresters and the general public can join in an open-minded discussion and learn more about both sides of the issue." said Masatoshi Endo, a graduate student in the college of Forest Resources and vice president of the Raleigh Chapter of the ISFT. Clearcutting is a controversial issue. Endo said. "Some think it is aesthetically displeasing, causes erosion, issue. Endo said.

"Some think it is aesthetically displeasing, causes erosion, destroys biodiversity and adversely affects wildlife," Endo said. "Others argue that it is a sound tool in tree farming, can maximize wood production and, when properly applied, mimics natural succession."

Growing concern over the lack of old growth forests and the loss of biodiversity has caused many citizens to question the unsightly practice of forest clearcutting. Foresters have come under closer scrutiny as the public has become more involved in these issues.

Williams also spoke about the advantages America has over third world countries.

"We have to decide as a society what [forest] outputs we want, and what [environmental] consequences we're willing to live with," Williams said.

Women's tennis: worth the watch

■ They're en fuego — but apparently, no one can see the smoke coming from Sullivan Drive.

The N.C. State women's tennis team has jumped out to an 11-1 start and a No. 35 national ranking due to a variety of reasons. Fan support is not one of them.

On Friday aftermoon, State gained its 10th victory of the season by beating the visiting University of Minnesota. Explain to me how the Golden Gophers had more fans in attendance than us?

Golden Gophers had more fans in attendance than us? It must have been the easy commute from the Canadian border. It is not easy to get anywhere from Minnesota, let alone to a non-conference tennis match in Raleigh. And it's not like the Golden Gopher fans came out in droves either, but their handful of fans outnumbered our zero. "It is disappointing." Coach Kelly Key said. "Our tennis team is playing really well right now." The women's program has made tremendous strides in the last two seasons. Last year it enjoyed its best season ever at 11-8, including the first-ever victory over North Carolina. Also, sophomore Kylie Hunt became the first player in N.C. State history to go the NCA tournament.
This year the Pack is even better.

This year the Pack is even better.
With six returning letterwinners and the addition of three-time state champion freshman Blair Sutton the team has opened the season the team has opened and sablaze.

State is led by number one singles player Kylie Hunt. The sophomore from New South Wales, Australia already has an NCAA tournament victory and the ACC indoor championship title under her belt. She is undefeated in 12 matches and is ranked nationally.

Opponents should start listing Hunt's name after death and taxes as guarantee.

Opponents stoods start issuing a surantee. Together with Margie Zimmer they are the 40th-ranked doubles team in the country. But the Pack isn't all Hunt. This team has heart.

College level tennis is for athletes who play for the sake of the sport and competing. The current status quo calls for 14- and 15-year-old girls to turn pro, sign a big endorsement contract, and leave the sport burned out at 19.

Look at Jennifer Capriati. It is encouraging to see these athletes playing their assess off. "These seven girls are by far the most determined group I have coached in my eight years at State," Key said.

Key said. State has 11 or more wins for the scond season in a row. And they aren't against teams like Little Sisters of the Poor. The ACC is one of the most difficult conferences in the NCAA. Duke, Wake Forest, Clemson, and the Pack are all in the missing." Key said. "The level of tennis in the ACC is very competitive."

And N.C. State is holding its own in the ACC. Propelled by the win over the Tar Heels on Wednesday, the squad has already matched last year's conference win total, and five ACC matchups remain.

The heart of the schedule lies ahead for the Pack, including home stints against fourth-ranked Wake Forest and defending ACC champ Florida State. State's postseason chances depend on how it fares against the heavyweights of the ACC.

A little fan support might just be what the team needs to put it over the top in those close conference matchups with national powerhouses. Senior captain Margie Zimmer thinks so.

"Well, it just pleases me when we look up at the stands and nobody is sitting there," Zimmer sacrastically quipped. "A little support could go a long way."

Dana Allen, substituting for the injured Meredith Quinn, needed three sets to dispose of Ashley Phillips, 6-1, 3-6, 6-2.

"Our skill level is better than Furman's," Coach Key said, "We are playing really good tennis."

Hunt continued to ravage the competition with her 12th consecutive W. The sophomore lost only two games en route to a straight set waltz over Amy Ditty, 6-1, 6-1.

In doubles competition, Hunt and Zimmer remained perfect with a 8-2 stomping of Ditty and Morris. The duo increased its win total to eight. They have their sights set on the NCAA championships.

"We have to keep attacking." Hunt said. "I think we can pull off some good wins."

The victory gives the Wolfpack 11 wins on the season. That equals the team's output of a year ago, which was a school record. The success has led to a nine-rung jump in the national rankings to No. 35.

The Pack is now entering the teeth of its schedule. Fourth-ranked Wake Forest, No. 9 Duke, and defending ACC champions Florida State are on the horizon for State.

"We have to beat those teams to make it to the NCAAs," Zimmer said. "It's going to take a lot."

The Pack had a tougher time dealing with the Golden Gophers.

At the center of the team was Yow. Her 20th season at State may have been her best coaching performance.

Before you can understand how this year's team meshed, you must understand what happened to the program before this season. Starting in 1988, Yow had four recruiting coordinators in four years. During the last three years, four players have transferred or quit the team. Four others have suffered a torn ACL. Last season. Yow was down to eight players at one point. During the last 14 games of the season, State's three losses were all to top-ten teams. The Wolfpack los to Virginia in Charlonesville, Nortl Carolina in the ACC Tournament and Georgia in the NCAAs.
In its 11 wins, State was led by Howard, an Academic All-American with a 4.0 GPA in communication. The crafty point guard may be the best on-court extension of Yow in the program's history. John Travolta (left), Quentin Tarantino (right) and "Pulp Fiction" all received Oscar nominations.

Oscar ain't like a box of chocolates, you always know who's gonna get it.

BY CLARENCE MOYE

ASSEMM ELERBA EDION

Appet very few surprises tonight when Oscar gives out his little golden offspring. This year, the general consensus—to echo the words of Forrest Gump—is "I'm not a smart man, but I know what's gonna win." Yes, Tom Hanks and most of the "Gump" crew should probably start rehearsing their acceptance speeches, barring a fuge upset victory by the underdog of the year. "Pulp Fiction." Other than Quentin Tarantino's "Pulp," "Gump" has no real competition in the best-picture race.

But some of the most popular performances will be upstaged by lesser known actors. Everybody loved Gary Sinise's Lieutenant Dan in "Gump." but he will lose to Martin Landau's Bela Lugosi from 'Ed Wood."

Don't scratch your head too hard. Although he was good in the part, the Oscar will be more of a career award for Landau than kudos for the role.

And big crowd pleasers such as Jodde Foster and Susan Sarandon probably won't, but should, leave with Oscar in tow, because Jessica Lange is the favorite for "Blue Sky." a film that was made four years ago that nobody saw.

But who ever would have thought Marisa Tomei would have won for "My Cousin Yinny."

"It goes to show that you never can tell."

And "that's Kool and the Gang."

hakespeare's original.

Some talented actors brought Shakespeare to Stewart Theatre.

By JEAN LORSCHEIDER

Center Stage presented a gripping, emotional production of "The Tragedy of Macbeth" Thursday. A few liberties were taken with the play, but the contemporary additions did not diminish the dialogue.

The play began with a startling, ominous scene in which a village was sacked. The scene, which contained portrayals of a brutal rape and a murder, set the tone for the rest of the play.

Throughout the production, the actors, many of whom were of African and Carribean descent, wore Western dress draped with colorful robes. Tribal drums marked scene changes, and as the intensity of the actors' plights increased, so did the drums' volume.

Though the opening scene, staging and costumes deviated from traditional renditions of Shakespearian theater, none of the Bard's words were changed for this production of "Macbeth."

finally, despair.

Macheth began as a man filled with concern and love for his friend, Banquo. His on-again, off-again jealousy of the royal family and Banquo increased bit by bit, until he was a wreck of a man, guilty of deceit and murder. When he held Lady Macbeth, played by Bella Enahoro, in his arms and recited the "Tomorrow".

Though Macheth is only a shadow of himself at the end of the play, de Jersey remained impressive through his character's descent. Enahoro's Lady Macbeth was the centerpiece of the play. She was manipulative, petulant and sultry, but eventually we got a glimpse of her frailty. Lady Macbeth was greedy and powerhungry and helped push her husband toward regicide. Enahoro built the character's madness steadily, until it became obvious to the audience and the other characters in the play that Lady Macbeth was losing her mind. The sleepwalking scene, when Lady Macbeth wrings her hands, trying to rid them of the bolood all the perfumes of Arabia will production showed that the tragedy or Macbeth is also the tragedy of Lady Macbeth.

Andy Rattenbury's Ross was also convincing. He started out as a stiff, merely political type. But as the character witnessed the uncontrollable events taking place around him, he grew more sympathetic.

The portrayal of the three weird sisters was exciting in its strangeness. The first sister, played by Anni Domingo, was intent upon Macbeth's destruction, and the second sister, played by Irma Inniss, seemed as if she were always in a tranec. The third sister, played by Josephine Melville, was childlike and often frightened. Their squealing and moaning lent an especially erric quality to the few crucial scenes in which they appeared. Sophomore Agri & Life Sciences

Mikie Dawson

"My first year on the Senate was an exciting learning experence. I learned exactly what our university needs to become - the best university it can be. I have tons of ideas! Some include increasing School Spirit during homecoming week and a student run book exchange. I worked extremely hard during my first term and I plan to work twice as hard for this term."

Sophomore Engineering

Telap Tan

"I am running for a Senate seat representing the College of Engineering. My goal is to represent my class to the fullest extent. Currently, I am actively involved with the Inter-Residential Council (2nd year). Enough said: I know the issues and I know how to get things to happen. VOTE!"

Senior Engineering

Adam Overbay

"Last semester I served on the Student Health Committee, and our recommendations were ignored by those in Student Government. I want to represent the College of Engineering as student Senator to be able to influence decisions made by Student Government."

Sophomore CHASS

Kerry Grace

"Committed to serving the students of NC State, I plan on remaining a supportive, reliable source for information to the faculty and student body. Current work on the Student Senate, the Public Relations Committee and recently representing NC State in Texas at a StA conference makes me an experienced and deserving candidate."

Junior Agri & Life Sciences

David H. Cline, IV

"I am running for Student Senate, because it would enable me to have an active role in making our school better place. It is important for students to have input concerning campus policy, and that every voice be heard. If elected, I will work hard to achieve these goals."

"As a Senator and Committee Head for the past three years I have represented the interests of campus Engineering Undergraduates vocally and often, in addition to sponsoring and supporting Engineering groups requesting funding. As a fourth-year veteran Senator, I would continue my effective representation of Engineers. Thanks for your support."

Scott Brown

"I have been honored to serve the students of CHASS this year by ensuring that the Humanities students receive the equal treatment we deserve. I also wrote a bill urging extension of our residence hall guest visitation hours. I appreciate your support so that I can continue to pursue your wishes."

Omar Lamm

"As a pre-medical student at NCSU. I strive for excellence in everything that I do. I have held administrative positions in various organizations throughout my educational career. Feel that this experience, along with a desire to be a leader of my fellow classmates, makes me the best candidate for this position."

Molly J. Subler

"I would like to be involved in making decisions that concern the University, especially the College of Engineering."

James Clagett

"Having recently become aware of how little impact student opinion has on University decisions. I want to increase our awareness of campu issues and encourage my peers to confront the administration as a united student body. Specifically I want to emphasize the importance of personal safety on campus."

Lindsay McCaskill

"Having been a senator my freshman year, I already have experience and interest in the Student Senate. I served on the Student Life Committee and I am currently involved in several projects which I hope to continue next year. Please give me your vote of confidence!"

Brigitte Yuille

Thave represented the College of Agriculture and Life Sciences as CAIS Intern, Howard Hughes Medical Research Intern, and as an ambassador for the Excursion to Ghana Program. Thave enjoyed being a part of Student Government this past year and would like to continue to help make improvements."

Only part of the role will be controlling student money. The outgoing student body president leaves behind a legacy of questions about his financial integrity. Protection from scandal is only part of the reason for voting. Filling out a ballot is a way to ensure better representation and the return of a representation and the return of a good reputation for Student Government. Participating in student elections makes a great deal of practical sense, too. Student Government officials vote on issues such as a proposed bicycle path near Fraternity Court. They can lobby the university administration for increased public safety measures, or for new parking decks. And recently, they've been the only filter between the students and an

Commentary

Why I'm voting for that self-styled bitch

The executive branch of Student Government has been some sort of sick narcissistic joke since! a rived at 7v.
State in 1991. As a result, I've newer taken the organization seriously.
Why should I' They' we all been too busy picking out office furniture or something.
If Student Government is supposed to be a training ground for future politicians and community leaders, each of our executives has earned an 4 in the political bait and switch. During the campaign they cry like Chicken Little promising to save the world, then after the election they fall off the face of the Earth.
NCSU has been saddled with Johnsonlike, resume-building student body presidents for too long. These are the selfinterested campus politicians who love to spend our money and little else, politicians who have failed to use their power as the voice of the student body to benefit their constituency of over 27,000.
And I guess I've gotten exactly what I've deserved. You see, like about 97 percent of you, I have never voted in a Student Government election.
It's not that I'm apathetic. I care about who represents me to the administration and worthy of my respect.
I guess it would be more accurate to say that I've been disillusioned. In four years, not one candidate has impressed me enough to vote for them.
But this year I plan to vote — and I plan to vote for Megan Jones.
It's not because she's a good friend of mine or anything. I barely know her — but I know what she's done. For the last year she has served as Student Senate president and vice president of lobbying for the UNC System Association of Student Government. The latter of these positions is what most impresses me about lones. NCSU needs a lobbyist as SBP, not a cheerleader. In the Student Government election

In the Student Government election debate last week, Jones was impressive. She said she has a "will-do" attitude rather than a "can-do" one, Jones is the type of person who will pound on doors and get her hands dirty. She is energetic and sincere — she will treat the position of SBP as a job rather than a title. Jones also remarked during the debate that if she sounded like a bitch it was because she might be one. Then she added, "But this bitch will work for you." If Jones is a bitch, then she is the Amanda Woodward of Student Government.

Amanda Woodward of Student Government. I know that Jones will indeed work for me — and that she will get the job done. In my choice for Jones, I have not overlooked the other candidates for SBP. Eric Ness is a feel-good candidate. He speaks of nice stuff, like togetherness and bringing back Wolfstock. But Ness has a passive personality — he is a great guy who can't trists arms. He would be ineffective as a SBP. John O'Quinn is one of those Chicken Littles I mentioned earlier. He would have

He says he will: manipulate the budgets of university departments and get federal aid to provide us with more Public Safety officers, improve living conditions in dorms, stop the tuition hikes, get the Nubian Message its own office, expand computing facilities, improve block seating, improve parking, kill the freshman college, get rid of the plus/minus system. anything else John? He has promised to do everything but end world hunger.

The office of SBP has no authority to do any of these things. They are controlled by the administration of NCSU. O'Quinn is an effective campapigner who is good at telling everyone what he can do—he's promised to do more than a $1.99 sk itchen appliance. But let's be realistic. O'Quinn has not displayed any leadership skills in his year as Student Senate president protent hat would lead anyone to believe he can tie his own shoes.

Besides, he has the personality of a tool shed.

Tanya Jones, current executive assistant executive assistant to the SBP anyway?

Ebony Fowler said her key issue is to raise the retention rate of NCSU students.
I guess that means she wants to be a tutor.
When I go to vote, I'm going to be practical. I'm going to ask who will work for me — I think it's the self-proclaimed bitch.

All the students who would be denied access to computers for weeks, all of the students who would have to pay a higher student fee in order to repair the system and all of the NCSU employees who get paid by the computerized ACS system.

I've been in Technician for revising the judicial code, for leading a protest on the Capital agains tuition hikes and for getting students buse to the football games — and all of this was before campaign time. Megan Jones Candidate for student body president Junior, English

Jones is a sincere candidate

Unlike my older sister, I usually keep my distance from political affairs. However, I felt it was my duty to help her campaign for student body president, so I joined her support committee. I learned quickly how hard it is to run for student body president because of the mud slinging that takes place.

Decause to sur-place. What I really don't understand is the statement made in W. Scott Tester's letter ("Low tacties make Jones look bad" from Friday's Technician) concerning Megan Jones' actions toward the e-mail message sent by one of John O'Quinn's supporters All I know is that if one of my opponents were using a questionable means of campaigning, I too would approach the Election Board to find out whether or not Election Board to find out whether or not it was legal, not as an attempt to smear my opponent, but to see if I would also be allowed to use this method to reach a larger number of students. I was one of the first to call her and ask if there had been a change in campaign policy, because we had been told that this type of campaigning would lead to disqualification according to the Election Board rule.

After attending the debate last Tuesday

orsquants and cotton to the electron board rule.

After attending the debate last Tuesday night, I learned a lot about all of the candidates. They all have great ideas, but I can honestly say that my sister made me believe she would accomplish all of her goals. She was excited about broposed student parking cutbacks and she sounded sincere about working for the needs of students. Ever since she became part of the Student Senate, maintaining and improving students' rights has been her passion.

Before this election, I had to be dragged to the polls to vote because I really didn't care. Now I realize our rights are being ignored because of people who think like I used to.

used to. Jones' campaign, in my eyes, is about the need for a strong student body president, and I am positive that she's the right person for the job. Just try to keep me away from a ballot.
